INTRODUCTION.

THE main objects of this work are—first, to enable the ‘English reader’ to find out the meaning and history of the foreign words and phrases which occur so frequently in English literature; secondly, to register the increase of the English vocabulary directly due to the adoption and naturalisation of foreign words since the introduction of printing; thirdly, to record all English words of foreign origin which have retained or reverted to their native form. The smallness of the staff and the small number of contributors have made it inevitable that these objects should not be fully attained and that the work should be uneven, but it is hoped that the attempts may be found to have met with a satisfactory measure of success. More than 50 per cent. (i.e. more than 6400) of the articles of the Dictionary and Supplement are devoted to the first object, which is popular; while the general public cannot fail to find very many of the remaining articles both useful and interesting even if the second and third objects above mentioned be not widely appreciated.

The term “Anglicised” has been taken to mean (a) ‘borrowed and wholly or partly naturalised’, as amity, bagatelle, calibre, calico, elegant, flummery, potato; (b) ‘used in English literature without naturalisation’ (often, however, with more or less mispronunciation), as amour (Mod.), café, embonpoint, enfant terrible, flotilla, genius, non compos mentis, onus probandi; (c) ‘familiarised by frequent quotation’, such as revenons à nos moutons, littera scripta manet, omne ignotum pro magnifico est, ora pro nobis, which are not Anglicised at all in the strict application of the term, but which it is convenient to include with such phrases as à tort et à travers, amende honorable, enfant terrible, non compos mentis, onus probandi.

Several hundred carefully selected books have been read for the purpose of collecting the literary materials upon which the best part of the work is based.

When the University of Cambridge, in 1882, accepted the bequest of £5000 left by the late Mr J. F. Stanford to be employed in the production of a dictionary of “Anglicised Words and Phrases”, the notes and collections made by Mr Stanford himself with a view to such a work were carefully examined. Mr Stanford’s interpretation of the term “Anglicised” was found to be very free, in fact equivalent to that given above.

The following Scheme, which fairly represents Mr Stanford’s views of the scope of the work which he desired to found, was drawn up by a committee appointed by the Syndics of the Cambridge University Press, the editor being responsible only for the examples. The Rev. Prof. J. E. B. Mayor, the Rev. Prof. W. W. Skeat, Prof. R. L. Bensly, Mr Aldis Wright, and Dr J. P. Postgate took part in the preparation of the Scheme.

SCHEME.

It is proposed that this Dictionary, while not professedly including technical terms, embrace :—

1. All words and phrases of non-European origin<sup>1</sup> found in English literature, if borrowed directly (with or without change of sound or form) from non-European languages :

e.g. Words: bulbul, bungalow, coffee, fellah, gobang, guinea, khaki, kismet, mahogany, pasha, ratan, proa, sago, selictar, seraph, shwanpan, sofa, tatty, toddy, tomahawk, tom-tom, ukase, umiack, vizier, waddie, wigwam, zenana.

<sup>1</sup> Under "words and phrases", throughout this Scheme, are included (a) such foreign proper names as are frequently used as common words, and words formed from foreign proper names, and (b) frequently cited foreign proverbs and short epigrammatic sentiments :

e.g. (a) Names, &c.: Alexander, Bordeaux, cicerone, Hector, Machiavellian, Mentor, pasquinade, philippic, shaloon, Sybarite, tontine, Vandal, vestal, volt, Zolaism.

(b) Phrases: ce n'est que le premier pas qui coûte, cosa fatta capo ha, ohne Hast ohne Rast, omne ignotum pro magnifico est.

2. All Latin and Greek words which retain their original form<sup>2</sup>, and all Latin and Greek phrases, in use in English literature :

e.g. Words: animal, anemone, antennae, aroma, augur, epitome, genius, habitat, index, medium, omnibus, pallor, paraphernalia, phalanx, premium, radius, ratio, scoria, sinciput, siren, thesis, toga, tribunal, vertigo, zeugma.

e.g. Aloe, conclave, &c., keep their old spelling but have lost their last syllable. We pronounce query and quaere, ether and aether, sulphur and sulfur identically, so that query, ether, sulphur keep their form with altered spelling. Such cases are rare. In most cases words which retain the original spelling of the Latin or Greek termination will be included. Words borrowed directly from Greek, as anaesthesia, hydrophobia, are regarded as unaltered in spite of the Latin method of transliteration.

3. All words and phrases borrowed directly from modern European<sup>3</sup> languages excepting French :

e.g. Words: antic, barouche, droitzschka, Ewigkeit, floe, fresco, frowe, geyser, guerilla, palaver, pasado, polka, poodle, quass, ranche, regatta, roster, schnapps, senhora, veneer, waltz, yacht, Zeitgeist.

N.B. Turkish is regarded as non-European.

4. All words and phrases borrowed from the French which retain the French pronunciation<sup>4</sup>:

e.g. Words: chignon, coup, ennui, espièglerie, gendarme, jardinière, lorgnette, naïveté, penchant, razzia, soupçon, viveur, vol-au-vent.

Phrases: à outrance, cul de sac, de rigueur, enfant terrible, je ne sais quoi, noblesse oblige, revenons à nos moutons, sauve qui peut, tableau vivant, tour de force.

<sup>4</sup> Words which approximately retain a definite characteristic French pronunciation of one prominent syllable or more will be included:

e.g. aigrette, bagatelle, chagrin, chevron, envelope, guitar, hotel, ormolu, prestige, terrein.

5. All words borrowed from French, Latin, and Greek, since the introduction of printing, whether now altered<sup>5</sup> or but imperfectly naturalised and now obsolete.

<sup>5</sup> That is, (a) all words borrowed from the French, which, having apparently come into use after A.D. 1470 (for 1471), are found in French form before A.D. 1612 (chosen so as to include Cotgrave's French-English Dictionary), or afterwards in French form in italics, &c., though their form or pronunciation or both be now altered; (b) all changed Latin and Greek words whose original form is found not earlier than 1470.

e.g. (a) cab, kickshaws, passport, scene, sequel, synod, toupee, vivify; (b) centaur, pyramid, syntax, tetrastich.

The work shall not professedly include dialectic forms.

An asterisk is to be prefixed to every article for which materials were found in Mr Stanford's collections, which materials in many cases consist of a number of extracts from periodical literature and newspapers. An asterisk is also to be prefixed to all quotations taken from Mr Stanford's collections.

Articles which deal with the fifth section of the Scheme have presented most serious difficulties, the words in question having been let alone by nearly all the few voluntary contributors, so that illustrative quotations have fallen seriously short just where they were in many respects most important. In very many cases there has been danger of including words which ought to be excluded because they prove to be, or will eventually prove to be, Middle English; as there is—with the notable exception of the New English Dictionary (A—Consigner and E—Every) edited by Dr J. A. H. Murray and Mr Henry Bradley—no full register of Middle English words derived from Latin and French. Consequently, as the Stanford E was worked off before the Part E—Every of the New English Dictionary came out, five words which have been included prove to have been found in Middle English, namely, emblem, evacuation, evacue, evagation, evaporation. However, only two instances of evacue (from the same author) are given in the Middle English period, and only one instance of the four other words*. It is therefore possible that about 30 words would have been wrongly inserted up to Cassz but for the information supplied by the New English Dictionary. It appears also that elope should have been excluded as a case of adaptation from Anglo-French instead of being included according to the previously current derivation from Dutch. On the other hand, efforce (sb.), efforce (vb.), elegance, epilogation, equipare, erode, erosion, and esquadron ought all probably to have been added under the fifth section of the Stanford Scheme to the 72 items of the kind which have been treated in the Stanford Dictionary between E—Every. The nouns ending in -or which have become or are becoming identical in spelling with Latin nominative forms in -or—such as actor, administrator, contributor, error, honor, minor, posterior, sponsor—have proved particularly troublesome, as many of them were Middle English derivatives from Anglo-French or French, and it seemed only fair to the public to take such merely English derivatives as abrogator, alliterator, commiserator, which, as to form, range with the words which come directly from Latin nominatives in -or or ultimately from accusatives in -orem. The indebtedness of the Stanford Dictionary to the New English Dictionary (up to Cassz) and to other dictionaries is especially heavy with regard to these words and those treated under the fifth section of the Scheme, both as to illustrative quotations and items of vocabulary (possibly 10 per cent. of the latter being due to the New English Dictionary up to Cassz). This portion of the work has been the least satisfactory, but still in many of the articles in question there has been compensatory success in supplementing previous researches, as for instance under abarre, †abatement, †abbreviator, abdicator, †abettor, †abstersive, †acceptance, accorage, accrue, †accumulator, †adage, †adhere, adjournment, †adulterator, †aggregator, ample, amplitude, amity, amusement, anatomist, animator, annotator, anomal, anterior, antiphonal, aper(i)tive, apostrophe (Gram.), appetitive, architector, architrave, artifice, artist, atheism, attentive, attractive, ball, cannonade, cataplasm, catarrh, cavalry, caveson, ensor, cerote, citadel, citron, cornice, director, emigrator, epithem, epode, equipage, escalade, emotion, esplanade, estafette, estimator, etiquette, exiture, expulse, facility, falsify, fruition, gallery, &c.

In cases of doubt whether a word is of French or Latin origin, it has been assumed that ecclesiastical words and words which occur first (so far as the incomplete evidence suggests) in translations from the Latin are rather adapted from Latin than adopted from French, and such words have accordingly been excluded. Words which are adapted from Latin, Greek, and French, are regarded as English coinages, following English models, the original adapter or adapters being no doubt in many cases quite unconscious that a fresh item was being added to the English vocabulary. Such adapted forms which made their first appearance in English dress are not included in this work, which professes to deal only with words and phrases which have appeared in foreign garb in English literature.

With regard to exotic words†—such rare specimens as are explained when used have been, as a rule, excluded; except in the case of names of vehicles, vessels, implements, coins, and commodities, which have no English names and seemed likely to be imported. For instance, jinrikisha was admitted long before the correspondence in the daily papers on the feasibility of introducing jinrikishas into London.

The editor and those who have given help in the revision have in very many cases

emblem	1589, 1598 St.	c. 1430, 1601 N.E.D.
evacue	1541 St.	c. 1400, c. 1400, 1541 N.E.D.
evagation	1502 St.	c. 1425, 1502 N.E.D.
evaporation	1533 St.	1398, 1533 N.E.D.

† For these words see also the Supplement.

‡ That is to say, words which have been neither wholly nor partially naturalised; such as names of foreign institutions, of articles which are unknown in Great Britain, or only seen in museums and collections, of foreign offices and dignities, &c., and foreign words which are seldom or never used except by writers addicted to interlarding their pages with foreign words and phrases.

had to trust to their memory to decide whether an exotic word or a phrase for which no quotation or only one had been found was sufficiently common in literature to be taken, and again they have often had to divine whether a word or phrase seemed likely to become more common than it was, so far as they knew, at the time it was under consideration. It would have been an endless and useless task to record all the words by which modern travellers and novelists have sought to give 'local coloring' to their narratives, such as numerous native words meaning 'milk', 'meat', 'rice', 'grass', 'horse', 'father', 'priest', &c., which have not been and are never likely to be Anglicised or to become familiar in English speech or literature. It has been thought well to omit geographical names applied only or mainly in trade to exports or in finance to stocks and shares; such as Demerara (sugar).

Many of the words which have been treated have severally developed in English a group of derivatives. No notice has been taken of such derivatives; e.g. echo and naïve have been treated, but not echo, vb., echoic, echoless, echoy, naïvely, naïvety.

A great many technical terms, which are employed in the fine arts, architecture, the drama, history, music, and rhetoric, appear with comparative frequency in general literature. Such terms therefore have been more freely admitted than terms relating to other arts and sciences.

The Syndics of the University Press, who settled the form and method of the Stanford Dictionary, decided to confine the etymology in the main to the indication of the language from which a word or phrase has been borrowed and of its native form and meaning, unless there was some fresh light to be thrown upon a derivation. Accordingly there are not very many full etymological paragraphs, but several of those which have been given will be found interesting, viz. those under Abdalli, abdat, Abracadabra, Alchochoden, alerce, aliquot, almuten, avast, burgoo, chemist, complot, elixir, fanal, hubbub, sentinel, stockade, tornado, while the assignment of a word to its native tongue supported by the illustrative quotations often corrects current derivations. For instance, many words hitherto derived from French have been assigned to Italian or Spanish; e.g. comrade, crimson, scimeter.

With regard to forms in -ado, it is in many cases difficult to determine whether a noun is borrowed from a Spanish form in -ada or an Italian form in -ada (Mod. It. -ata). Mr R. Seymour Conway has supplied a reference to Gröber's Grundr. d. Roman. Philologie, Bd. I. p. 530, § 69. These earlier Italian -ada's have hitherto been ignored by English etymologists, though Florio gives several, e.g. panada, pomada, scalada (as well as panata, pomata, scalata), frisada, rodomontada. It is therefore almost certain that there were once in Italian the forms gambada, stoccada, strappada, and possibly passada, &c. In the 15th and 16th, and even the 17th and 18th centuries, unaccented Spanish, Portuguese, and Italian a's were often turned into o's in English loan-words, as in the forms bagatello, bardello, barrico, berlino, bonano, borasco, botargo, chopine, comrade, grotto, hollock, junto, montero, potato, primero, salvo (artillery), stockade, tobacco, tobardillo, umbrello, visto.

The accentuation of naturalised words has been approximately indicated by using - to represent an unaccented syllable, ' to represent an accented syllable, " to represent a comparatively strongly accented syllable. If the mark ' or " be repeated with regard to the pronunciation of one word, it is not implied that the two stresses are quite equal, nor is it implied that all syllables marked as unaccented have precisely the same stresslessness.

About 100,000 illustrative quotations with dates and references have been collected, over 30,000 having been supplied by voluntary contributors, and of the total amount some 40,000 have been used. The date of composition or first publication is placed before a quotation. The date of the edition used (if not the first) is placed in brackets after the reference; in the case of reprints the date of the edition reprinted (if not the first) is placed before the reference.

Quotations from general literature which have been taken from other dictionaries have been specially acknowledged except in a few awkward cases (e.g. when a correction has been made upon verification) and perhaps in two or three instances (one has been discovered) through oversight. Indebtedness to dictionaries in respect of quotations from other dictionaries, cyclopaedias, glossaries, and works for which full indexes or concordances are available has not been specially acknowledged. A few such quotations or references are due to the New English Dictionary and to Prof. Skeat's Etymological Dictionary. Up to Cassz a very large number of literary quotations has been borrowed from the New English Dictionary, most of which have been specially acknowledged; and the editor is also indebted to that colossal and admirable work for several Old French forms, for the suggestion of some books, and for the names and addresses of persons likely to help. The high standard of excellence set by this work must influence all succeeding dictionaries relating to the English language, in sundry ways which it is not easy to specify in a short compass. The late Col. Yule's Hobson-Jobson has been a great help in the treatment of Anglo-Indian words. In the etymological treatment of Persian and Semitic words Prof. W. Robertson Smith has supplied almost everything of value; while the Rev. G. W. Collins gave useful assistance in this branch at the outset of the work. Cassell's Encyclopædic Dictionary and the 'Century' Dictionary have continually been consulted with advantage.

For careful revision and very many valuable suggestions the editor is under great obligations to Dr Henry Jackson (Trinity College, Cambridge); Prof. W. Robertson Smith (Christ's College, Cambridge); Mr R. J. Whitwell (Kendal); and to the Readers of the University Press.

Illustrative quotations from the following contributors are gratefully acknowledged:—From the Rev. J. Pierson, D.D. (Librarian of Alma College, Michigan, U.S.A.), about 12,000; from the Rev. W. H. Beckett (Chelmsford), over 4000; from Miss R. H. Busk, over 3000; from Mr J. Randall, over 2000; from the Rev. Dr A. Smythe Palmer (Woodford) and the Rev. Benjamin Talbot (Columbus, Ohio, U.S.A.), over 1000 each; from the Rev. H. Thurston, S.J. (St Asaph), Mr F. G. F. Hutt, Mr R. J. Whitwell, Mr R. F. Sketchley (West Kensington), Miss Foxall (Edgbaston, Birmingham), Miss Gunning (Cambridge), several hundred each; from Dr J. A. H. Murray, Dr F. J. Furnivall, Dr Henry Phillips, Junr. (Philadelphia, U.S.A.), Miss Haig (Stirling), Mrs Stuart (Edinburgh), Miss Wilkinson (Cambridge), over 100 each; from the Rev. J. Smallpeice (St Bees, Carnforth), about 100; together with smaller quantities from Mr G. L. Apperson (Wimbledon), Mr J. Dykes Campbell (Kensington Gore), Dr R. S. Charnock (New Thornton Heath, Surrey), Mrs Damant (Cowes), Mr H. Johnson (Cambridge), Mr J. Y. Johnson (Funchal, Madeira), the Rev. W. J. Löwenberg (Bury, Lancs.), the Rev. A. L. Mayhew (Oxford), Mr M. Pearson (Frisby-on-the-Wreke, Leicester), Miss Margaret Westmacott, Mr R. J. Whitely (Plymouth), the Rev. W. B. R. Wilson (Dollar).

Prof. J. E. B. Mayor (St John's College, Cambridge) has kindly permitted the editor to use two richly annotated editions of Johnson's Dictionary.

Information on special points has been kindly furnished by Mr E. G. Browne, the Rev. Prof. G. F. Browne, Miss R. H. Busk, Prof. E. B. Cowell, the Rev. T. C. Fitzpatrick, Prof. T. McKenny Hughes, Dr A. H. Mann, the Rev. A. L. Mayhew (Irish etymologies), Prof. J. H. Middleton, Prof. A. Newton, Mrs Salmon, the Rev. Prof. W. W. Skeat, Prof. Sir T. F. Wade, K.C.B., Sir Richard Webster, Q.C., M.P. (the Attorney-General), Prof. C. E. Wilson, Sir H. T. Wood, K.C.B., Mr W. Aldis Wright, and others.

The editor's assistant, Mr F. G. F. Hutt, has displayed quite a genius for the kind of work, and his able and enthusiastic help has proved throughout of the highest value.

The Dictionary, including the Supplement, contains 12,798 articles (which treat of 13,018 words and phrases) and 2708 cross-references. The 12,798 articles are concerned with 10,927 words, 1813 phrases, and 278 quotations, proverbs, or maxims. The distinction between 'word' and 'phrase' has been in many cases arbitrary, as also, in fewer instances, has been that between 'phrase' and 'quotation'.

Latin*	3797	Aramaic, Ethiopic, Hebrew	133
Greek*	495	Dravidian	31
Italian	1199	Malay	47
Spanish	716	Russian	48
Portuguese	153	Chinese	25
Dutch	155	Japanese	27
German	205	African	31
Scandinavian	33	American Indian, &c.	81
Celtic	113	Various languages from which
Hindoo	336	only a few words are taken...	134
Sanskrit	32	English* {from French 1380}
Persian	162	{from Latin ... 653}...	2076
Arabic	225	{from Greek... 43}

* The French words which have not been naturalised, and the Latin and Greek words which have kept or reverted to their native form, are here classed separately from words derived from French or Latin, which have been altered or naturalised; as very many words of the class in question are homologous with words which have been introduced too early or too late to be included in this work (see p. vii.). Words borrowed from other languages, whether adopted or adapted, are all counted together.

1580 What shall we say to such a Chrysippus, as alloweth not the argument a majōribus [pl.]: FULKE, Answers, p. 204 (1848). 1614 The Apostle proved soundly by an argument a majōri ad minus that the Church might ordayne & dispose of secular judgments: T. FITZHERBERT, Rep. to Widdrington, ch. III. p. 42. 1618 God doth it for most just ends, and thus a reddition might be framed, saith he, a majōri ad minus: P. BAYNE, Com. Ephes., Nichol's Ed., p. 41/2 (1866). 1656 The argument by which he confuteth them is drawn a majōri ad minus, from the greater to the less: N. HARDY, 1st Ep. John, Nichol's Ed., p. 81/2 (1865). 1682 yet it is an argument fetched a majōri, not a bare opposition only: TH. GOODWIN, Wks., in Nichol's Ser. Stand. Divines, Vol. VII. p. 60 (1863).

1549 We have a manner of reasoning in the Schools, and it is called a minore ad majus, "from the less to the more": LATIMER, Sermons, p. 166 (Parker Soc., 1844). 1550 For me thought thou was framing an argument à minōri ad majus, or to be better understood à delegato ad ordinariū: W. P., Tr. Curio's Pasq. in a Traunce, p. 3 v. 1722 it may be an argument a paribus, but not a minori: as you seem to make it: WHITGIFT, Wks., Vol. II. p. 96 (1852). 1580 This is a notable and sententious comparison, 'A minore ad majus': E. KIRKE, in Spens. Shep. Cal., Nov., Glosse, Wks., p. 483 (1869). 1652 And thus the Apostle tacitly insinuates an argument, à minore ad majus: N. CULVERWEL, Light of Nat., Treat., p. 5. 1696 An argument a minōri ad majus is strong with God: D. CLARKSON, Pract. Wks., Nichol's Ed., Vol. I. p. 190 (1864). bef. 1733 the Argument a minōri: R. 1659 In cases where they are sure it is lawful to follow their Agreements, though they be not satisfied of the necessity of it à nātūra rei, they ought to follow them on the account of unity: R. BAXTER, Key for Catholics, Pt. II. ch. iv. p. 445.

1758 I seem to have told you all I know, which you will think very little, but a nihilo nil fit [Gray]: GRAY and MASON, Corresp., p. 156 (1853).

à non causa pro causa, phr.: Lat.: from a cause which is not (a non-cause) instead of a cause.

1665 Still you do reason, A non causa pro causa; attributing that unto the outward sign, which is indeed the virtue of Christ, and belief in His passion: CALPHILL, Ans. to Mart., p. 92 (Parker Soc., 1846). 1672 This argument is a non causa: WHITGIFT, Wks., Vol. II. p. 455 (1852). 1646 The third is, A non causa pro causa, when that is pretended for a cause which is not, or not in that sense which is inferred: SIR TH. BROWN, Pseud. Ep., Bk. I. ch. iv. p. 12 (1686).

*à outrance, phr.: Fr.: to (the) utmost, to the bitter end; rendered 'utterance' by accommodation to the totally unconnected Eng. 'utter' in Caxton (1485), Charles the Grete, p. 142 (Ed. 1881), 'pylers of marble & other stones bygonnen to brenne & make fyre at vtterance'; cf. Holland (1600), Tr. Livy, Bk. XXI. p. 417, 'fight at the utterance'; id. (1601), Tr. Plin. Nat. Hist., Bk. v. ch. 22, Vol. I. p. 428, 'they will drinke to the utterance'; and Shaks. (1605), Macb., III. I. 72, 'champion me to the utterance'.

1606 He exhibited one sword fight performed by fencers to the outrance: HOLLAND, Tr. Suet., p. 91. 1804 truly we have no pleasure in seeing his contemporaries spur their hobby horses headlong against each other, and fight at outrance: Edin. Rev., Vol. 4. p. 161. 1837 there was a famous quarrel, à l'outrance, about it: J. F. COOPER, Europe, Vol. I. p. 310. 1860 Francis II. will be called upon to make his choice between casting in his lot with the defenders à l'outrance of Gaeta, or making his escape by sea: Once a Week, Oct. 20, p. 476/2. 1883 Every duellist à outrance binds himself to commit suicide or murder: Standard, Oct. 24, p. 5/2.

à paribus, phr.: Lat.: from equals; see par.

1572 it may be an argument a paribus, but not a minori; as you seem to make it: WHITGIFT, Wks., Vol. II. p. 96 (1852). 1580 as though an argument a paribus were not good, except the conclusion were expressed in Scripture, Doctor, or Council: FULKE, Answers, p. 193 (1848).

à parte ante, phr.: Lat.: lit. 'on the side before', opposed to à parte post (Lat.), 'on the side after'. See quotations.

1652 And yet it can far better behold the back-parts of Eternity, then the face of it: Eternity à parte pōst, then Eternity à parte antē: N. CULVERWEL, Light of Nat., Treat., p. 168. 1656 this life [i.e. of Christ] is most properly said to be eternal, because it is so both a parte ante and a parte post, from everlasting to everlasting: N. HARDY, 1st Ep. John, Nichol's Ed., p. 20/1 (1865). 1674 Why could not God as well make the world everlasting a parte ante, on the behalf of formerness, as he did the soul of man a parte post, on the behalf of laterness: N. FAIRFAX, Bulk and Selu., p. 164. 1682 The reasons for this... are drawn a consequenti, or a parte post; that is, from the good consequence or fruit of them: TH. GOODWIN, Wks., in Nichol's Ser. Stand. Divines, Vol. IX. p. 400 (1864). 1759 The eternity of the Godhead a parte post is proved thus: GOLDSMITH, Rev. of Hawkins' Misc., Wks., Vol. IV. p. 249 (1854).

à parte rei, phr.: Lat.: on the side of reality, as opposed to imaginary existence.

1606 He maketh it Ens Rationis, or a meere Chymera (as logicians hold) hath no essence or being at all à parte rei: R. PARSONS, Answer to Coke, ch. 13, p. 320.—There is no one substantial reason a parte rei: ib., ch. 16, p. 379.

a per se, A per se A, A per C, phr.: Late Lat.: the letter A by itself; Metaph., the prime, flower, that which is unique or peerless.

bef. 1422 London! thowe arte of townes a per se, | Sovereigne of cities: in Reliquie Antique, Vol. I. p. 205 (1841). 1554 my good lord, you are A per se A with us, to our comfort and joy unspeakable: JOHN BRADFORD, in Letters and Treatises, p. 139 (Parker Soc., 1853). 1559 Behold me, Baldwin, A per se of my age: BALDWIN and FERREKS, Mirror for Mag., 371. [Nares] 1673-80 Every on A per se A: GAB. HARVEY, Lett. Bk., p. 98 (1884).—Hese A per se A, a ladd for the nonse: ib., p. 120.

Variants, apersie, apersey, A per C.

[Perhaps originally for '& per se &', 'and per se and', or 'ampersand', placed at the end of the alphabet.]

1848 A PIACERE. At pleasure: RIMBAULT, Pianoforte, p. 90.

à pieds joints, phr.: Fr.: 'with feet joined'; to jump (sauter) à p. j. means to take a big jump.

à plaisir, phr.: Fr.: at pleasure.

1818 She is to have free ingress and egress, à plaisir, at Dunore Castle: LADY MORGAN, Fl. Macarthy, Vol. III. ch. III. p. 158 (1819).

1480 for to bring this thyng to an ende he assailed hym & his companie a pena et culpa: CAXTON, Cron. Eng., ch. ccxxi. 1547 the bishop of Rome... taketh upon him to sanctify all other men of the earth as God's vicar and lieutenant, to absolve a poena et culpa: BP. HOOPER, Early Writings, p. 73 (Parker Soc., 1843). 1560 hys free pardon a pena et culpa: JAMES PILKINGTON, Aggeus, sig. O liii r. 1641 Hence he is said to be "Jesus" Mat. I. 21, because he saves his from their sins: not a culpa only, and a pana, but a contagione: R. STOCK, Comm. Malachi, in Puritan Comm., p. 204/1 (1865).

à portée, phr.: Fr.: within reach, capacity, lit. 'range'.

1748 When you are in company, bring the conversation to some useful subject, but à portée of that company: LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, Vol. I. No. 125, p. 286 (1774). 1783 I am in the country, and not à portée to see the royal physicians: HOR. WALPOLE, Letters, Vol. VIII. p. 378 (1858).

à posteriori, -e, phr.: Lat.: 'from what is later' in physical or logical order, opposed in Logic to à priori; used of reasoning from consequences or effects to principles or causes; equivalent to 'inductive, inductively'. For the facetious use see posterior.

I. adv.:

1758 Is it à posteriori from experiments that he deduces this proposition?... If he argues à posteriori from experiments, he can pretend only to probability: J. ADAMS, Diary, Wks., Vol. II. p. 38 (1850). 1758 I will allow lord Bolingbroke, that the moral, as well as physical, attributes of God must be known to us only à posteriori: GRAY, Letters, No. cii. Vol. II. p. 34 (1819). 1830 reasoning à posteriori from final causes, or the intelligent adaptation of means to ends: Edin. Rev., Vol. 52, p. 113. 1843 Such familiar maxims, when collected à posteriori from observation of life, occupy among the truths of the science the place of what, in our analysis of Induction, have so often been spoken of under the Title of Empirical Laws: J. S. MILL, System of Logic, Vol. II. p. 436 (1856).

II. adj.:

1688 We confess that the scriptures may be demonstrated by an argument a posteriori: WHITAKER, Disput., p. 351 (Parker Soc., 1849). 1630 the cause may be proved by the effect, which is a posteriori: J. S., Trial of the Protestant à primo ad ultimum, phr.: Lat.: 'from the first to the last'. See quotation.

1549 the old scholastic argument A primo ad ultimum: LATIMER, 7 Serm. bef. K. Edw. VI., II. p. 68 (1869). 1630 and so à primo ad ultimum, all the elect must have true faith: J. S., Trial of the Protestant Private Spirit, II. ch. viii. p. 205.

*à priori, -e, phr.: Lat.: 'from what is earlier, prior' in physical or logical order, opposed to a posteriori.

A. LOGIC. Of reasoning from principles, definitions, or causes to consequences, special cases, or effects; equivalent to 'deductive, deductively'. Also, loosely, of presumptive opinion.

I. adv.:

1618 he that may know he hath true faith, may know, a priori, that he hath love also: P. BAYNE, Comment. Ephes., Nichol's Ed., p. 83/2 (1866). 1790 The science of constructing a commonwealth [is]...not to be taught à priori: BURKE, Ref. on Rev. in France, p. 90 (3rd Ed.). 1803 Des Cartes arrived at a complete system of physics, deduced a priori from the abstract suggestions of his own reason: STEWART, Life in T. Reid's Wks., p. 202 (1840). 1804 A priori, such a work seemed particularly calculated to engage the public attention: Edin. Rev., Vol. 4, p. 214. 1835—6 a portion of the nervous system...might à priori be expected to bear a corresponding ratio of development: TODD, Cyc. Anat. and Phys., Vol. 1, p. 69/1. 1843 deductively, or à priori: J. S. MILL, System of Logic, Vol. I, p. 399 (1856).

II. adj.:

1652 a demonstration à priori, is esteemed most certain and scientific: N. CULVERWELL, Light of Nat., ch. xi. p. 117.—demonstration of him à priori: ib., ch. xviii. p. 212. 1674 The reason a priori of my assertion and all hitherto said is thus: E. WORSLEY, Infall. of Cath. Ch., I. p. 73. 1798? I think that Butler's Analogy...would answer...all the objections to Christianity founded on a priori reasonings: S. T. COLERIDGE, Unpubl. Letters to Rev. J. P. Estlin (H. A. Bright, 1884). 1843 an obstinate à priori prejudice: J. S. MILL, System of Logic, Vol. II, p. 190 (1856).—It is hardly necessary again to repeat, that, as in every other deductive science, verification à posteriori must proceed pari passu with deduction à priori: ib., p. 451. *1876 he should not in future take the trouble to discuss that doctrine on a priori grounds: Times, Dec. 7. [St.]

B. METAPHYSICS. Of knowledge, conceptions, and forms of thought either acknowledged to be acquired prior to any conscious recognition thereof, or assumed to be prior to all individual experience; equivalent to 'intuitive, intuitively'.

I. adv.:

1838 You must, therefore...confess, that it [the conception of substance] has its seat in your faculty of cognition à priori: HAYWOOD, Tr. Kant's Critick of Pure Reason, p. 7.

II. adj.:

1838 a cognition independent of Experience...Such cognitions we term à priori, and we distinguish them from the empirical, which have their sources, à posteriori, that is to say, in experience: HAYWOOD, Tr. Kant's Critick of Pure Reason, p. 4. 1843 the cases which lay the strongest claims to be examples of knowledge à priori: J. S. MILL, System of Logic, Vol. II, p. 303 (1856). 1867 Shall we then take refuge in the Kantian doctrine? shall we say that Space and Time are forms of the intellect,—à priori laws or conditions of the conscious mind? H. SPENCER, First Princ., Vol. I, p. 49 (2nd Ed.).

à propos, apropos, phr.: Fr.: 'to the purpose', relating to the subject propounded, fit(ly), opportune(ly); sometimes with to, of.

I. adv.: opportunely, in respect (of), with reference (to); also absol. in the nick of time! to the point!

1669 A propos! I have been retrieving an old Song of a Lover that was ever quarrelling with his Mistress: DRYDEN, Mock-Astrol., v. Wks., Vol. I, p. 324 (1701). 1738 your two last most agreeable letters. They could not have come more à-propos: WEST, in Gray's Letters, No. xviii. Vol. I, p. 33 (1819). 1746 A propos of negligence; I must say something upon that subject: LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, Vol. I, No. 81, p. 179 (1774). 1772 And I'm deputed from our company | Ambassador of peace to the old man— | And, apropos! he's here—Health to Theoprides: R. WARNER, Tr. Plantus, Vol. III, p. 274 (1772).

II. adj.:

1691 It is certainly...a propos what he had said before in that Page: T. H[ALE], New Invent., 44. [N. E. D.] 1709 Thought it extremely à propos, | To ward against the coming blow: M. PRIOR, Paulo-Purg., Poems, Vol. I, p. 135 (1870). bef. 1733 the Wit of Man could not have found out a Conduct more à propos in that Conjunction, than what the King used: R. NORTH, Examen, I. iii. 163, p. 229. 1780 tell you a story apropos of two noble instances of fidelity and generosity: HOR. WALPOLE, Letters, Vol. II, p. 189 (1857). 1838 the remark was particularly apropos to the large wisdom of the stranger's tone and air: HAWTHORNE, Amer. Note-Bks., Vol. I, p. 136 (1871). 1847 A something smart and apropos, | For my new Album: BARMHAM, Ingolds. Leg., p. 506 (1865).

III. sb.: propriety, seasonableness.

1668 they often use them with better judgment and more a propos than the English do: DRYDEN, Ess. on Dram. Po., Wks., Vol. I, p. 13 (1701). 1869 Well...he commenced, without any à propos: Once a Week, Dec. 24, p. 538/2.

1878 He remarked without being careful of the à propos: G. ELIOT, Dan. Deronda, Bk. vi. ch. 48, p. 440.

Variants, 18 c. 19 c. a propos, apropos.

à propos de bottes, phr.: Fr.: 'touching the subject of boots', i.e. irrelevantly.

1757 [After a sentence abt. note-books] A propos de bottes, for I am told he always wears his: was his Royal Highness very gracious to you, or not? LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, Vol. II, No. 96, p. 385 (1774). 1845 J. W. CROKER, Essays Fr. Rev., I. p. 14 (1857).

*a quatr'occhi, phr.: It.: lit. 'to four eyes', face to face, or tête à tête, of two people by themselves.

1816 one word, a quatr'occhi, is worth whole reams of correspondence: BYRON, in T. Moore's Life, Vol. III, p. 198 (1832).

à quatre, phr.: Fr.: of (or between) four.

1883 He had convoked them [the Assembly] to examine and ratify the Convention signed by the Conference à quatre: Standard, Sept. 17, p. 5/5.

à quatre épingles, phr.: Fr.: with scrupulous neatness, lit. 'with four pins': also used attrib. in English.

1870 his brown throat is bared in a négligé, as becoming to most men, as the à quatre épingles exactitude of their park get-up is unbecoming: R. BROUGHTON, Red as a Rose, Vol. I, p. 235.

1862 The pretty little duet à quatre mains: THACKERAY, Philip, Vol. I, ch. xix. p. 350 (1887).

à ravir, phr.: Fr.: in ravishing style, most charmingly. Sometimes written incorrectly au ravir.

1820 could not perform the heroine, because she did it à ravir: MRS. OPIE, Tales, Vol. III, p. 208. 1858 Charley...waltzed au ravir: A. TROLLOPE, Three Clerks, II. i. p. 12.

a re, the name of the lowest note but one of the full musical scale of Guido Aretino, and also of the second lowest note of his fourth and seventh hexachords; but the two higher A's coinciding also with la of another hexachord and mi of a third, were named in the collective scale A-la-mi-re. See gamut.

aasvogel, sb.: Ger.: 'carrion-bird'.

1887 Nobody would be likely to find the bodies of the two men and horses under the lonely bank there. Certainly they would not be found till the aasvögels had picked them clean: H. R. HAGGARD, Jess, xxvi. in Corrhill Mag., Jan., p. 110.

ab, abs, ā, præp.: Lat.: 'from, off, of, by, on the part of' (as prefix 'away from, away, wrongfully'), forming part of Lat. phrases and of words of Lat. origin. See quotations and phrases beginning with ā, ab.

1660 The second [argument] hath been drawn a congruo, from congruity: NEWTON, on John 17, in Nichol's Coms., p. 109/1 (1867). bef. 1733 reasoning ab improbabilitate...impossibilitate ['from the improbable...the impossible']: R. NORTH, Examen, I. iii. 129, p. 206.

1655 Their folly and madness herein Christ disproves with an argument ab absurdo: J. OWEN, Vindict. Evang., Wks., Vol. VIII. p. 272 (Russell, 1826).

1682 as if the apostle meant to argue, ab absurdo, from an apparent absurdity that would follow upon the contrary: TH. GOODWIN, Wks., in Nichol's Ser. Stand. Divines, Vol. IX. p. 452 (1864). 1714 most of them [arguments] are rather drawn ab absurdo, than from any clear light about the nature of the object known: HALYBURTON, Nat. Relig. Insuf., Wks., p. 304 (1835).

ab aeterno, phr.: Lat.: from eternity, without beginning.

1652 As for the minde of the Platonists and the Stoicks we have before acquainted you with it, one looks so high, as if a Creation would scarce content them, unless they may have it ab aeterno: N. CULVERWEL, Light of Nat., ch. xi. p. 109. 1669 they added that the world might be created ab aeterno: Annot. upon Rel. Med., p. 212. 1887 Quarterly Rev., Jan., p. 196.

1831 there may have been an infinity of causes ab ante: Edin. Rev., Vol. 54, p. 149.

1600 the tree of life is called the tree of life ab effectu: R. CAWDRAV, Treas. of Similies, p. 37. 1682 It is an attribute ab effectu...from what he doth: TH. GOODWIN, Wks., in Nichol's Ser. Stand. Divines, Vol. IX. p. 251 (1864).

1693 It is a most strange demonstration, ab effectu reciproco [alternating]; he called those he hath elected; he elected those he called: Comm. 1 Ep. Peter, i. 2.

1600 is called The tree of knowledge of good and euill: not because it giueth such knowledge of itself, but it is called ab eventu: R. CAWDRAV, Treas. of Similies, p. 37.

ab externo, phr., ab extrinseco, phr.: Late Lat.: from outside.

1610 So that if our nature were of it selfe, wee should know our owne wisdom, and never go about to know it by learning, ab externo: J. HEALEY, St Augustine, p. 429.—Indede a wise man is to endure death with patience, but that must come ab externo, from another mans hand, and not from his owne: ib., p. 759.

1650 Of our bodies infirmities, though our knowledge be partly ab extrinseco, from the opinion of the Physician: J. DONNE, Poems, p. 284 (1669). 1696 what virtue they have is ab extrinseco, from divine assistance and co-operation: D. CLARKSON, Pract. Wks., Nichol's Ed., Vol. II. p. 112 (1865).

1. adv.:

1650 There are many demonstrations of his will herein that may be taken ab extra from his [i.e. God's] oath: TH. GOODWIN, Wks., in Nichol's Ser. Stand. Divines, Vol. IV. p. 210 (1862). 1659 As for the Presbyterians...both in France and Scotland they [the Papists] have cunningly wrought upon them ab extra: R. BAXTER, Key for Catholicks, ch. xiv. p. 326.

2. adj.:

1652 the divine understanding never receives the least tincture from an object, no species ab extra, but views all things in the pure Crystal of his own essence: N. CULVERWEL, Light of Nat., ch. xi. p. 115. 1672 when it [i.e. sin] is committed with little opposition ab intra, and in spite of all opposition ab extra, I assure you then it hath a great power: T. JACOMB, Romans, Nichol's Ed., p. 118/1 (1868). 1696 It is inconsistent with his divine perfections to be moved by anything ab extra, without: D. CLARKSON, Pract. Wks., Nichol's Ed., Vol. II. p. 66 (1865).

1606 A third reason is taken ab inconvenienti: R. PARSONS, Answer to Coke, ch. iv. p. 86. 1803 MACDONNEL, Dict. Quot.

1599 If those lawes...had been deliuered vs, ab initio, and in their present vertue and perfection: B. JONSON, Ev. Man out of his Hum. (Prolog.), Wks., p. 87 (1616). 1767 it ought to have been declared null ab initio: HOR. WALPOLE, Letters, Vol. V. p. 50 (1857). 1788 specific sums out of that fund, void in event by the subsequent death of the devisees in the testator's life-time, but not those which are void ab initio: J. POWELL, Devises, Vol. II. p. 93 (1827). 1828 the Scotch courts...declare null and void ab initio, a marriage contracted through fraud: Edin. Rev., Vol. 47, p. 101.

1785 There is neither a conveyance to him, nor a succession ab intestato devolving on him: TH. JEFFERSON, Explan., Diplom. Corresp., 1783—1789, Vol. II. p. 473 (1833).—the 11th article of the treaty provides that the subjects or citizens of either party shall succeed ab intestato to the lands of their ancestors, within the dominions of the other: ib., p. 472. 1818 the English courts receive their regulations for successions ab intestato: Edin. Rev., Vol. 31, p. 112.

ab irato, phr.: Lat.: in angry mood, in the first heat of anger; lit. 'from an angry (man)'.

1885 If a violent article appeared against him, I fancy Victor Hugo, who used to read everything, used to answer it ab irato for himself: Athenaum, Aug. 8, p. 171/2.

ab officio et beneficio, phr.: Late Lat.: Eccles. from office and benefice, of a clergyman suspended from the exercise of ministerial functions and from the receipt of the benefits of an Ecclesiastical living or dignity.

1686 the Bishop might have suspended the Doctor ab officio et beneficio: SIR J. BRAMSTON, Autobiogr., p. 248 (1845).—Neither did the precept say whether the Doctor should be suspended ab officio, or beneficio, or both: ib., p. 244. 1686 He was only suspended ab officio, and that was soon after taken off: EVELYN, Diary, Vol. II. p. 268 (1872). 1693 And that such as transgress any one of these Directions, be suspended by the Lord Bishop of the Dioceses...Ab officio & beneficio; for a Year and a Day: J. HACKET, Abp. Williams, Pt. I. 101, p. 90.

1537 as I can affirm unto you with certain and sure arguments, as you shall hereafter know all together ab origine: LATIMER, Remains, p. 382 (Parker Soc., 1845). 1654 The chapel is reformed, ab origine: EVELYN, Diary, Vol. I. p. 319 (1872). 1681 he called it so...chiefly because it is ab origine in man, from the time that the foundation of man's nature is laid: TH. GOODWIN, Wks., in Nichol's Ser. Stand. Divines, Vol. II. p. 121 (1861). bef. 1733 a proper Mover or Informer of the Matter ab origine: R. NORTH, Examen, I. II. 167, p. 117. 1847—9 chemical differences exist ab origine in blastemata themselves: TODD, Cyc. Anat. and Phys., Vol. IV. p. 102/1.

ab ovo, phr.: Lat.: 'from the egg'. Metaph., from the beginning.

1595 if they [dramatic poets] will represent an history, they must not (as Horace saith) beginne Ab ovo: but they must come to the principall poynt of that one action, which they will represent: SIDNEY, Apol. Poet., p. 64 (1863). 1708—9 he (Statius) asks his Muse where to begin his Thebaid, and seems to doubt whether it should not be ab ovo Leda: POPE, Letters, p. 44 (1737). 1804 In this historical review of Ireland, our author has commenced ab ovo: Edin. Rev., Vol. 5, p. 155. 1862 Shall we begin ab ovo, sir? THACKERAY, Philip, Vol. 1. ch. 1. p. 113 (1887).

[The origin of the phrase, at any rate as used by Sidney, is HORACE, A. P., 147, Nec gemino bellum Troianum orditur ab ovo, the twin egg from which Helen of Troy was born; but cf. next article.]

*ab ovo usque ad mala, phr.: Lat.: from the beginning to the end, i.e. of a Roman banquet, which usually began with an antepast or whet of eggs and salt fish called promulsis. See HOR., Sat., i. 3. 6, si collibuisse, ab ovo Vsque ad mala citaret, Io Bacche!

1593 Rather than he will lose his wenche | He will fight ab ovo usque ad mala: PEELE, Edward I., p. 384/x note (4to., 1861). 1655 MUFFETT, Health's Improv., p. 295.

ab urbe condita, phr.: Lat.: from the building of the city (of Rome). The epoch was fixed by most chronologers of ancient Rome at B.C. 753, the above phrase or the initials A. U. C. being appended to the dates of their era just as the initials A.D. are to our dates.

1647 So have the saints of God here [a terrible tempestuous time of it] for most part ab utero ad urnam, from the womb to the tomb: JOHN TRAPP, Comm. on New Test., p. 484 (1868).

1. apparently the only correct use, as shown under 2. 'A square compartment enclosing a part or the entire pattern or design of a Mosaic pavement': R. STUART (1830).

1753 ABACUS, (Cycl.)—or ABACISCUS, in the ancient architecture, is used to denote certain compartments in the incrustation or lining of the walls of state-rooms, Mosaic pavements, and the like: CHAMBERS, Cycl., Suppl. 1829 ABACISCUS, in ancient architecture, the square compartments of Mosaic pavements: Lond. Encyc.

2. 'sometimes used as synonymous with abacus': R. STUART (whom Gwilt copies). He seems to follow Nicholson in misunderstanding Chambers who makes abaciscus synonymous with abacus in the meaning 1 only.

abductor (= u =), sb.: Eng. fr. Late Lat.

1. Anat. a muscle which abduces, or draws a part of the body from its normal position, or from a line regarded as an axis, opposed to adductor; also attrib., = abducent.

1615 For every Muscle almost hath set vnto him another, whose action is contrary to his, as...to an abductor is set an adductor: H. CROOKE, Body of Man, p. 743 (1631). 1738 CHAMBERS, Cycl. 1847-9 In the Quadrumanus... there is a proper abductor of the thumb, adductor as it would be called by the Anthropotomist: TODD, Cyc. Anat. and Phys., Vol. IV. p. 731/1.

2. one who abducts or leads away wrongfully.

1850 his ponderous-footed elfin abductor, who had leaped down after him: Household Words, Apr. 13, p. 68/1.

[Noun of agent to Lat. abducere, = 'to lead away, aside'. In sense 2 the word ought to be abduct-or, Legal English for abductor, but has probably been confused with, or taken from, abduc-tor.]

abdula, sb.: Arab.: lit. 'servant of God'; esp. a monotheist who is not a moslem, e.g. a Christian; used in place of the father's proper name in the style of a proselyte to Mohammedanism to distinguish him from a moslem by birth. Thus Rejeb if a proselyte is Rejeb ben Abdullah, if his father, Omar, were a moslem, he is Rejeb ben Omar. MENINSKI, Lex., Vol. III. p. 678.

1615 No Jew can turn Turk until he first turn Christian, they forcing him to eat Hogs-flesh, and calling him Abdula, which signifieth the Son of a Christian: G. SANDYS, Trav., Bk. I. p. 42 (1673). 1635 no Jew is capable to be a Turk but he must be first an ABDULA, a Christian, he must eat hogs flesh, and do other things: HOWELL, Epist. Ho-EL, Vol. II. x. p. 300 (1678).

Abib: Heb.: name of the first month of the Jewish ecclesiastical year, our April, the seventh month of the civil year, called Nisan after the Captivity.

1535 This daye are ye gone out, euen in 7th moneth of Abib: COVERDALE, Exod., xiii. 4. 1611 in the month Abib: Bible, ib.

[Heb. ābīb, = 'an ear of corn'. It was the month in which harvest began.]

*Abigail (1 = 1), sb.: Heb.: a waiting gentlewoman, a lady's maid.

1671 every gentleman that keeps a chaplain, has not a cousin Abigail to wait upon his lady: J. EACHARD, Wks., Vol. i. p. 135 (1773). 1693 thou art some forsaken Abigail, we have dallied with heretofore: CONGREVE, Old Bachelor, III. vi. Wks., Vol. i. p. 52 (1710). 1711 I myself have seen one of these male Abigails [ladies' valets] tripping about the Room with a Looking-glass in his hand: Spectator, No. 45, Apr. 21, p. 75/2 (Morley). 1766 Juno... [Kung for her Abigail; and you know, I Iris is chambermaid to Juno: HOR. WALPOLE, Letters, Vol. iv. p. 508 (1857). 1771 serving-men, and abigails, disguised like their betters: SMOLLETT, Humph. Cl., p. 34/1 (1882). 1815 I have prepared, however, another carriage for the abigails, and all the trumpery which our wives drag along with them: BYRON, in Moore's Life, Vol. III. p. 155 (1832).

abiliment, abillement (= 1 = 1), sb.: Eng. fr. Anglo-Fr.: Special use in 16 c. an ornament of goldsmith's work for the head or the front of the dress.

abt. 1515 Take now upon you this abylyment: SKELTON, Magnif., Wks., Vol. II. p. 116 (Boston, 1864). 1541 velvet and satin for billiments: QU. CATH. HOWARD, in Burnet's Hist. Ref., vi. 250 (Pocock). 1642—6 an nyether Abillement set wth xxxij. great perles: Princ. Mary's Pr. Purse Exp. Invent., Jew., p. 181 (F. Illust.*, p. 13 (1832). 1588 one velvet jerkin laid one wth billim<sup>t</sup> lace: Will and Inventory of William Glasenour, Chetham Soc., Vol. LIV.—one paire of round hose panes of blacke rashe laid one wth a billymi lace: ib. [N. & Q.]

[From Fr. habillement, = 'dress', 'article of dress'. The fact that the lopped form billement is only found in the above special sense seems to show that the Fr. habillement in this special sense was once more borrowed with an attempt to pronounce the new importation differently from the old.]

abiogenesis, sb.: badly coined fr. Gk.: generation of living organisms from dead matter.

1883 Here, in short, is the categorical denial of Abiogenesis and the establishment in this high field of the classical formula Omne vivum ex vivo: H. DRUMY MOND, Natural Law, 74.

[Coined by Prof. Huxley in 1870 fr. ābios, = 'without life', and genesis, = 'generation', 'birth'. It ought to be abiogenesis. Cf. parthenogenesis, which was probably Huxley's model.]

[From Eng. accelerate for accelerator (Cotgr.), as if Lat. noun of agent to accelerare, = 'to hasten'.]

accent ( = ∟ = ), sb.: Eng. fr. Fr.: prominent or expressive intonation.

1. melodic intonation of the syllables of each word according to fixed general laws and fixed customs as to individual words.

The old Greek and old Latin had three varieties of accent produced by two varieties of pitch, differing in Greek, according to Dionysius Halicarnassius, by about a fifth. The laws and habits of melodic intonation differ in different languages and even in different dialects. The syllable in old Greek which was uttered on the high pitch was said to have the acute accent (ᾰεία προσφῶδια) marked by ' above the vowel of the accented syllable. Under certain circumstances the ultimate or penultimate syllable containing a diphthong or long vowel received the circumflex accent (περισπωμένη προσφῶδια), i.e. the utterance of the syllable began on the high pitch and ended on the low pitch, marked by ' over the vowel of the accented syllable. The syllables of a word which were pronounced without either of these accents were uttered on the low pitch, the grave accent (βαρεία προσφῶδια), which was only marked (by ' over the vowel) when the acute accent of a final syllable was changed to a grave accent in connected speech. The high pitch in Greek and Latin never came earlier than the last syllable but two, the antepenultimate, and never occurred more than once in a single word. The high pitch may have been accompanied by some stress. About A.D. 300 melodic accent in Latin and Greek gave place to stress accent, which is heard in most modern European languages (exceptions being French, which has lost almost all syllabic accent, and some Scandinavian dialects, which still have melodic accent).

1589 that other which seemed in part to lift vp and in parte to fall downe, they called the circumflex, or compast accent: PUTTENHAM, Eng. Poes., II. vi. 65 (1811).

I a. variable modulation of pitch in speaking.

bef. 1637 All our vowels are sounded doubtfully. In quantity (which is time) long or short. Or, in accent (which is tune) sharp or flat: B. JONSON, Eng. Gr. (1696). 1840 Accent is a kind of chanting; all men have accent of their own,—though they only notice that of others: CARLYLE, Heroes, 247 (1858).

2 a. ready to listen, affable.

1619 He is very accessible to any that hath busines with him: HOWELL, Lett., i. ix. p. 19 (1645). bef. 1782 May she! and, if offended Heav'n be still | Accessible, and pray'r prevail, she will: COWPER, Table Talk, Poems, Vol. i. p. 15 (1808).

1818 He had shown himself in a certain degree accessible to touches of humanity: SCOTT, Hrt. of Mill., 185. [N. E. D.]

accession (ˌ ʌ ˈ ʃ ɪ ɒ ˈ n), sb.: Eng. fr. Fr. accession.

I. 1. a coming to, approach, admission: technical in Astron. arrival, advance.

1646 not varying at all by the accession of bodies upon, or secession thereof from its surface: SIR TH. BROWN, Pseud. Ep., Bk. II. ch. ii. p. 43 (1686). 1648 All our talk now is of my Lord of Norwich, his march and accession in Essex: EVELYN, Corresp., Vol. III. p. 14 (1872). 1762 A safe accession to that barren shore: FALCONER, Shipwreck.

I. 1 a. arrival at a position of dignity, esp. the throne.

1716 King William's accession to the throne: ADDISON, Wks., Vol. iv. p. 479 (1856). 1855 by the death of a careless and goodnatured prince, and by the accession of a prince obstinate in all things: MACAULAY, Hist. Eng., Vol. i. p. 534 (1861).

I. 2. a coming to as an addition, adjunct, adherent, accessory; assent.

1603—5 The King repented himself of his Accession to that affair: SIR J. MELVIL, Memo., 130 (1735). [N. E. D.] 1625 The great Accessions and Unions of Kingdomes, doe likewise stirre vp Warres: BACON, Ess., lviii. p. 574 (1871). 1679 with the accession of his partner...he grew excessively rich: EVELYN, Diary, Vol. II. p. 144 (1872). 1693 Yet a man need not say his Life is under great Adversity for want of such Accessions; which are but Notes of good direction in the Margent of the Book: J. HACKET, Abp. Williams, Pt. II. p. 207. 1707 since the accession of the Spanish monarchy: ADDISON, Wks., Vol. iv. p. 344 (1856). 1776 Many prisoners of consequence became a valuable accession to the spoil: GIBBON, Decl. and Fall, Vol. i. p. 399 (1813).

I. 2 a. Leg. an addition to property by natural growth or transfer, or by artificial improvements, e.g. planting or building.

1768 The doctrine of property arising from accession is also grounded on the right of occupancy: BLACKSTONE, Comm., II. 404. [N. E. D.] 1876 By occupation, what belongs to nobody is acquired; by accession what belongs to somebody is given to a new owner: W. A. HUNTER, Roman Law, Bk. I. iii. (8), A. II. (A. 1), p. 128.

I. 2 b. Med. a coming on of disease, an attack, paroxysm; also metaph. of mental visitations.

II. that which comes as an addition, increment, aid.

1588 The forme of this Commission hath varied with the time, and received sundrie accessions: LAMBARDE, Eirenarcha, I. ix. 47. [N. E. D.] 1673 I am much better pleased to send him so just a tribute, than I can be to receive any additional accessions to my gardens: EVELYN, Corresp., Vol. III. p. 243 (1872). 1689 Your library being by this accession made suitable to your generous mind: ib., p. 304. 1715 A large accession of dominion fell to him, by his succeeding to the dukedom of Zell: ADDISON, Wks., Vol. IV. p. 402 (1856).

accessor (ˌ ɒ ˈ ʃ ɪ ɒ ˈ r), sb.: Eng. fr. Late Lat.: "a comer to": BLOUNT, Glossogr. (1681).

accessory (ˌ ɒ ˈ ʃ ɪ ɒ ˈ r ɪ), sb. and adj.: Eng. fr. Anglo-Fr.

I. sb.: 1. one who, without actually taking part in the committal of an offence, either has a guilty knowledge of the matter before the fact, or aids the offender or offenders to escape punishment after the fact (1607 Cowell).

1487 the same slayers and murderers and all other accessories of the same: CAXTON, Statutes 3 Henry VII., ch. i. sig. b iii v. — may take and haue theyr appele...ayenste the sayd persones so arrayned and acquyte, and all other their accessories: ib., sig. b iii v (1869). 1598 the tryall of accessories to felony: SPENS, State Irel., Wks., p. 619/2 (1883). 1628—9 in the lowest and highest offences there are no accessories, but all are principalis: COKE, Littleton, 57. 1867 The appellants, as accessories to what was done on their premises, would have been guilty of the misdemeanour: SIR A. J. E. COCKBURN, Law Reports, 2 Queen's Bench, 133.

I. 2. a secondary adjunct, anything which comes as an aid or addition.

Archit.*, p. 141. 1876 That for whose sake another exists, is the principal to which the other is the accessory: W. A. HUNTER, Roman Law, 128.

II. adj.: answering to the sb. The earliest spelling is accessary, fr. the Lat., and therefore the adj. does not come within the scope of this work.

Variants, 15 c. accessorie, accersorie, 16 c.—19 c. accessary.

[Apparently adopted from Legal Anglo-Fr. accessorie, sb., accessori, adj. (found by Skeat in Year-books of Ed. I.'s reign, yrs. xx. xxi. Horwood, Record Ser., 1866, p. 161; yrs. xxxii. xxxiii. ib., 1864, p. 385). The form accessary, as if fr. Lat. with the more usual termination of words of this class (namely -arius), seems to be rarer bef. 1600. The Anglo-Fr. accessorie, Fr. accessoire, may be due to confusion between quasi-Lat. accessarius and Late Lat. accessorius as if fr. accessor noun of agent to accēdere, = 'to come to'. The word was very likely in use in English before Caxton used it and accessary {1480 Chron. Eng., vii. 157 b/1 (1520). N. E. D.}. In sense 2 probably direct fr. Lat., cf. 1614 T. FITZHERBERT, Rep. to Widdrington, ch. 2, p. 33; that axiome of the law accessorium sequitur principale, = 'the accessory follows the principal'.]

acciaccatura, sb.: It.: the striking an auxiliary note (or two at an interval not greater than a minor third), only just before a main note in music, the grace note or the first of the two being a semitone below the main note; also the note (or the two notes) so struck. The second quot. makes the two notes the proper acciaccatura, and goes beyond the above definition in calling the 'twitch' a short acciaccatura.

1819 REES, Cycl. 1873 AUXILIARY NOTES are notes one degree above or below essential or unessential notes, preceding such notes, either with or before the accompanying harmony...The Appoggiatura, Acciaccatura, &c., are examples of such notes: BANISTER, Music, § 225—6 (1882). 1876 The beat is a short acciaccatura, consisting of its first note only, a semitone below any note to which it gives special force. The twitch is a short acciaccatura consisting of its latter note only: TROUTB. & DALE, Music Primer, 47. [N. E. D.]

accismus, sb.: Late Lat.: Rhet.: affectation of unwillingness to accept a tempting offer.

[From Gk. ἀκκισμός, = 'affectation', 'pretended indifference'.]

acclamator (ˌ ɒ ˈ ʃ ɪ ɒ ˈ n ɪ), sb.: Eng. fr. quasi-Lat.: one who acclaim, applauds.

1651 saluting the ladies and acclamators: EVELYN, Diary, Vol. I. p. 269 (1850).

accoglienza, sb.: It.: a welcome, a kind reception.

1612 with much courtesie gaue him an Accoglienza speaking only in the, Latine Tongue: CORVAT, in Purchas' Pilgrims, Vol. II. Bk. x. p. 1827 (1625). 1612—3 every one having a particular accoglienza from him [the king]: J. CHAMBERLAIN, Court & Times of Jas. I., Vol. I. p. 225 (1848).

accolade (Fr. -ade ˌ ɒ ˈ ʃ ɪ ɒ ˈ d e), sb.: Eng. fr. Fr. accolade (partly naturalised).

1. an embrace; hence the ceremonial act (embrace, kiss, light blow), on making a knight, now dubbing, i.e. giving a light blow with the flat of a sword on either shoulder.

1623 Giving him also the Accolade, that is to say, Kissing him: FAVINE, Theat. Honour, I. vi. 51. [N. E. D.] 1681 ACCOLADE (Fr.) a ceremony of embracing, or clipping about the neck, used in antient time at the dubbing Knights: BLOUNT, Glossogr. 1814 the hardness of his gripe, and the quantity of Scotch snuff which his accolade communicated, called corresponding drops of moisture to the eyes of the guest: SCOTT, Waverley, p. 103 (1886). 1839 my sword's forgot. However, take my verbal accolade: P. J. BAILEY, Festus, p. 242 (1866). 1884 An esquire praying before his armour, asking that he might do nothing in his life to sully his knightly spurs, with prayerful fear awaiting his accolade: Tablet, Vol. 63, No. 2300, p. 804/2.

2. Mus. a thick line joining the staves of a score. GROVE, Mus. Dict.

[The rare Mid. Eng. doublet acolee is fr. Old Fr. acolee, = 'embrace', 'hug'.]

1. adaptation, adjustment.

1629 he alone gave Form to that whole part which treated of Judgements in accommodation to the Claustral state: BRENT, Tr. Seave's Hist. Council. Trent, p. xvi. (1676).

2. conciliation, complaisance, act tending to conciliation, settlement (of differences).

1642-3 sending an Ambassr. into England to treat of an accommodation: EVELYN, Corresp., Vol. IV, p. 338 (1872). 1663 mediation Of Treaty and accommodation: S. BUTLER, Hudibras, Pt. I. Cant. i. p. 55.

3. the supplying of requisites; any requisite or comfort supplied; entertainment, lodgings; a loan.

1603 For all the accommodations that thou [life] bear'st | Are nursed by baseness: SHAKS., Meas. for Meas., iii. 1, 14 (1864). 1604 such accommodation and besort | As levels with her breeding:—Oth., i. 3, 239. 1641 an Hospital ... where the accommodations are very great: EVELYN, Diary, Vol. I. p. 25 (1872). 1644 there is a noble cascade and pretty baths, with all accommodations: ib., p. 63. 1646 finding little accommodation in the house: ib., p. 245.

accommodator (= 1 = 2 =), sb.: Eng. fr. Low Lat.: one who adapts; conciliates, supplies needs.

abt. 1630 At the most he is but the accommodator, (an easy trifle,) not the inventor: W. ROBINSON, in Lett. to Sci. Men, i. 11 (1841). [N. E. D.] 1762 Mahomet wanted the refinement of our modern accommodators: WARBURTON, Doctrine of Grace, ii. 331. [T.]

accorage, vb.: Old Fr.: encourage.

1545 Aftr two yeres Philometer obtayned helpe of the Romans to recouer his lost cities, and thus accouraged of the Romans, he expelled his aunccles syriake hoste and armye: GEO. JOYE, Exp. Dan., 198 <sup>2</sup>. 1590 But that same forward twaine would accorage: SPENS., F. Q., ii. ii. 38.

[From Old Fr. acorager, = 'to encourage'. Spenser subsequently, F. Q. III. viii. 34, uses the Anglicised form accourage (= 1 =). Both forms are poetic for encourage, q. v.]

*accordion (= 1 =), sb.: a portable musical instrument with keys admitting wind to metal reeds, the middle of the instrument being a bellows worked by drawing apart and bringing together the ends. Invented in Vienna 1829 (Grove).

1842 I have bought another accordion: DICKENS, in Forster's Life, III. iv. 105. [N. E. D.] 1857 A young lady, very tempestuous on the piano...does me no ill almost; nor does your friend with the accordion: CARLYLE, in J. A. Froude's Life, Vol. II. p. 195 (1884).

actrice, sb.: Fr.: a female stage-player, actress. Perhaps regarded as Eng. in 18 c.

actu, actum, actus, abl., acc., and nom. of actus, sb.: Lat.: 'act', 'deed', 'actuality'; used in various techn. phrases. Thus actus primus or actus signatus in Scholastic Logic is the mere designation of an act (sometimes almost = δύναμις, 'potential operation'), opposed to actus secundus or actus exercitus, the actual practice (sometimes almost = ἐνέργεια, 'actual operation').

1616 But these last are rather potentiâ than actu: J. CHAMBERLAIN, in Court & Times of Jas. I., Vol. I. p. 412 (1848). 1674 Gods bare Essence must be forthwith or actu [in actuality] but his everlasting Essence...must be forth-coming or in potentiâ: M. FAIRFAX, Bulk and Selv., p. 17. 1671 If we consider it in actu signato, or in its abstract idea, this is its temperament: JOHN HOWE, Wks., p. 263/2 (1834). 1696 Acts are good in themselves in actu signato, from the matter: D. CLARKSON, Pract. Wks., Nichol's Ed., Vol. II. p. 114 (1865). 1684 we are active in actu exercito, but not in actu signato: S. CHARNOCK, Wks., in Nichol's Ser. Stand. Divines, Vol. III. p. 205 (1865). 1702 we look upon it [i.e. the covenant] as in actu exercito, viz. as it is now transacted and entered into by the beloved God: JOHN HOWE, Wks., p. 107/2 (1834). 1696 but in actu exercito, and as acted by us, they [i.e. acts] cannot be good, without a good principle, a due form, a right end: D. CLARKSON, Pract. Wks., Nichol's Ed., Vol. II. p. 114 (1865). 1681—1703 foundations firmly laid in the soul do implicitly work when they are not in actu exercito, or explicitly thought upon: TH. GOODWIN, Wks., in Nichol's Ser. Stand. Divines, Vol. VIII. p. 187 (1864). 1674 There is the actus primus, or the quickening act of this principle: JOHN OWEN, Wks., Vol. II. p. 320 (1826). 1681 This power in 'actu primo', or fundamentally, is in the church itself: ib., Vol. XX. p. 378. — This power...in 'actu secundo', or its exercise, [is] in them that are especially called thereunto: ib. 1681—1703 and so to create a workmanship to good works, is to endow the heart with such abilities, and actus primi, as they are called, as should enliven the heart to good works, as actus secundi: TH. GOODWIN, Wks., in Nichol's Ser. Stand. Divines, Vol. VI. p. 436 (1863). 1684 The sacrament is a seal in actu primo, in its own nature, but not in actu secundo: S. CHARNOCK, Wks., in Nichol's Ser. Stand. Divines, Vol. IV. p. 434 (1865). 1749 but for the rationale, I can only allow it him in actu primo (to talk Logic) and seldom in actu secundo: LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, Vol. I. No. 173. p. 514 (1774). 1681 There are two acts of faith; the one is upward to God, and the other is downward, Actus elicitus, as we call it, and actus imperatus: TH. GOODWIN, Wks., in Nichol's Ser. Stand. Divines, Vol. II. p. 335 (1861). 1681—1703 And so justification in God is one uniform act, actus indivisus as divines speak: ib., Vol. VI. p. 105 (1863). 1642 passive possibility to any thing, which is the fountain of all change, can have no place in him who is actus simplex, and purely free from all composition: JOHN OWEN, Displ. of Armin., Wks., Vol. v. p. 63 (Russell, 1826). 1673—80 a certain solemn venerable grace to my most reverend Regentesship when it comes in actum: GAB. HARVEY, Lett. Bk., p. 74 (1884). 1652 But in respect of him that is subject to the Law it does consist in actu rationis, 'tis required only that he should know it, not in actu voluntatis, it does not depend upon his obedience: N. CULVERWEL, Light of Nat., ch. iv. p. 25. 1699 Though every law proceeds from the will of the lawgiver, and doth formally consist in actu voluntatis, yet it presupposes actum intellectus: S. CHARNOCK, Wks., in Nichol's Ser. Stand. Divines, Vol. v. p. 465 (1866).

1839 we are not going to praise it: it wants vigour, to our taste, and what you call actualité: W. M. THACKERAY, Misc. Essays, p. 142 (1885). 1884 French dramatists lose little time in the production of actualités: Athenaeum, Jan. 5, p. 30/1.

actualiter, adv.: Lat.: actually, κατ' ἐντελέχειαν.

1674 God's being as such is altogether in a readiness or actualiter: N. FAIRFAX, Bulk and Selv., p. 175.

actum agere, phr.: Lat.: to do what is done, to waste time and labour in vain repetition.

1621 you will infer that this is actum agere, an unnecessary work: R. BURTON, Anat. Mel., To Reader, Vol. i. p. 8 (1827). 1648 these things...here I must not prove, lest I should actum agere: JOHN OWEN, Wks., App., Vol. v. p. 561 (Russell, 1826). 1654 to have tied myself unto a contest with him, had been merely actum agere, without promoting the cause I had undertaken in the least: ib., Vol. vi. p. xxi. 1662 lest you otherwise seem actum agere, as the word is: EVELYN, Corresp., Vol. iii. p. 138 (1872).

actum est (de), phr.: Lat.: 'it is all over (with)'.
1614 Actum est, of him for a common-wealths-man: if hee goe to't in Rime, once: B. JONSON, Bart. Fair, iii. 5, Wks., Vol. ii. p. 41 (1631—40). bef. 1733 if he can prove his point upon an Authority, so well accepted as this is, actum est: R. NORTH, Examen, i. i. 8, p. 19 (1740).

**acūmen*, sb.: Lat.: 'keenness', 'sharpness' (Met. of the mind, as often in Lat.), 'shrewdness'.

1573—80 y<sup>e</sup> subtle and intricate acumen of Aristotle: GAB. HARVEY, Lett. Bk., p. 71 (1884). 1599 nothing...doth sooner abate that which we call, acumen ingenij, then your grosse fare: B. JONSON, Ev. Man out of his Hum., ii. 3, Wks., p. 106 (1616). 1689 one Scholar may be taught otherwise upon the Stock of his Acumen, but not a whole School: SELDEN, Table-Talk, p. 68 (1688). 1818 Milton's divine poem of the Paradise Lost may have come under your observation, and stood the test of your critical acumen: LADY MORGAN, Fl. Macarthy, Vol. ii. ch. ii. p. 100 (1819). 1842 I...shall still think them two men | Till some Sage proves the fact 'with his usual acumen': BARHAM, Ingolds. Leg., p. 249 (1865).

1696 Acupictor, (lat.) an Embroiderer in needlework, as it were a Painter with a Needle: PHILLIPS, World of Words (5th Ed.).

acushla, sb.: Ir.: darling; for a cuisle, = 'O pulse' (of my heart).

1883 Come, acushla! henceforth let us be brothers: H. JAY, Connaught Cousins, Vol. i. ch. vi. p. 138.

acÿron, sb.: Gk.: use of a word or phrase in an improper sense.

1594 Cursed or detestable, by the figure Acyron, when a word of an vnproper signification is cast in a clause as it were a cloud: R. SCOTT, Disc. Witch., xiv. ch. vii. p. 371. 1589 Ye have another vicious speech which the Greekes call Acyron, we call him the vacouthe, and is when we vse an obscure and darke word, and viterly repugnant to that we would expresse: PUTTENHAM, Eng. Poes., p. 262 (1869).

ad amussim, phr.: Lat.: 'according to the (mason's or carpenter's) level', accurately, exactly.

1640 this agrees ad amussim with Uranore or Psyche...the celestial Venus: H. MORE, Phil. Po., sig. c 1 (1647). 1663 For though the Thesis which thou lay'st | Be true ad amussim as thou say'st: S. BUTLER, Hudibras, Pt. i. Cant. i. p. 62. 1693 Is there but one Tree of Knowledge in all the Paradise of the Church of God? Or must all be despised that are not reformed ad amussim? J. HACKET, Abp. Williams, Pt. i. 36, p. 34.

ad arbitrium, phr.: Lat.: 'at will', arbitrarily.

ad calendas Graecas: Lat. See ad kal. Graec.

**ad captandum* [vulgus], phr.: Lat.: 'to catch (the vulgar)', of an argument or statement; also ad captum vulgi.

1621 As for those places of scripture which oppugn it [the study of mathematics, &c.] they will have spoken ad captum vulgi, and if rightly understood & favourably interpreted not at all against it: R. BURTON, Anat. Mel., Pt. 2, Sec. 2, Mem. 2, p. 327 (1867). 1762 These paltry tricks ad captandum vulgus can have no effect but on ideots: SMOLLETT, Lawnc. Greaves, ch. x. Wks., Vol. v. p. 91 (1817). 1780 I said this was a figure of rhetoric, employed by his Lordship ad captandum vulgus. I believe so still, but I believe he meant it also ad captandum regem: J. ADAMS, Lett., Diplom. Corresp., Vol. iv. p. 408 (Boston, 1829). 1811 only to write 'ad captandum vulgus': BYRON, in Moore's Life, Vol. ii. p. 62 (1832). 1837 such an ad captandum argument, as the offer of half a guinea: C. DICKENS, Pickwick, ch. x. p. 95. 1883 showy and ad captandum arguments: Standard, Oct. 12, p. 5/3. 1886 The tale...has a sort of ad captandum interest: Athenaeum, Feb. 6, p. 198/3.

ad clērum, phr.: Low Lat.: 'to the clergy'; a discourse to the clergy was called shortly a clerum.

1573—80 there was a sermon ad clerum first: GAB. HARVEY, Lett. Bk., p. 3 (1884). 1642 by sermons ad clerum, he caused such a 'spring' among divines as was not seen in many years before: TH. FULLER, Abel Red., Vol. ii. p. 290 (1867).

ad crumēnam, phr.: Lat.: 'to the purse', of an argument or appeal.

1759 Then, added my father, making use of the argument ad crumēnam,—I will lay twenty guineas to a single crown-piece: STERNE, Trist. Shandy, Vol. ii. ch. xii. Wks., p. 79 (1839).

ad eundem [gradum], phr.: Low Lat.: 'to the same (degree)', of the admission of a graduate of one University to the same degree at another without examination; metaph. of admission of a member of any one society into another.

1711 you are invited to be admitted ad eundem at CAMBRIDGE: Spectator, No. 98, May 30, p. 126/2 (Morley). 1730 Dr. Middleton was presented ad eundem by the Margaret professor, Dr. Jenner: THOS. HEARNE, Remains, in Lib. of Old Authors, Vol. iii. p. 58 (1869). 1772 I would instantly scratch my name out of the buttry-book of Almack's; be admitted, ad eundem, among the Muses: HOR. WALPOLE, Letters, Vol. v. p. 404 (1857). 1783 he shall be admitted ad eundem...into the Church of Rome: ib., Vol. viii. p. 440 (1858). 1869 they are admitted ad eundem among the chosen ones of the city of Exeter: A. TROLLOPE, He knew He was Right, Vol. i. ch. vii. p. 49. 1885 Graduates came...and supplicated for incorporation ad eundem, as a matter of usage so unvarying as to be almost a right: Athenaeum, Aug. 29, p. 267/1.

1. adv.:

1660 God does then most glorifie and exalt himself in the most triumphant way that may be ad extra or out of himself: J. SMITH, Sel. Disc., p. 137 (1673). 1681 what works all three Persons do towards us ad extra...are attributed more especially to one Person than to another: TH. GOODWIN, Wks., in Nichol's Ser. Stand. Divines, Vol. i. p. 503 (1861). 1696 We have all the confirmations and assurances, ad extra, that the most suspicious heart can desire: D. CLARKSON, Pract. Wks., Nichol's Ed., Vol. i. p. 195 (1864).

2. adj.:

1657 all the works of the Trinity ad extra, are indivisible: J. OWEN, Wks., Vol. x. p. 330 (Russell, 1826). 1671 all God's acts ad extra are free: J. HOWE, Wks., p. 222/1 (1834). 1681—1703 By God's ways sometimes all his works ad extra are meant: TH. GOODWIN, Wks., in Nichol's Ser. Stand. Divines, Vol. vi. p. 519 (1863). 1684 the acts of those [perfections] ad extra are not necessary but upon a condition...the acts of those [perfections] ad intra, or within himself are necessary: S. CHARNOCK, Wks., in Nichol's Ser. Stand. Divines, Vol. ii. p. 195 (1864).

1652 how do they act ad extremum virium in all expressions of malice and wickedness? N. CULVERWEL, Light of Nat., Treat., p. 147. 1684 the sun shines...ad extremum virium, unless a cloud interpose: S. CHARNOCK, Wks., in Nichol's Ser. Stand. Divines, Vol. ii. p. 437 (1864). 1691 For he being Infinite in all Perfections, cannot act ad extremum virium, unless he could produce an Infinite Creature, that is, another God, which is a Contradiction: J. RAY, Creation, Pt. ii. p. 378 (1701). 1696 He [Christ] did not act as natural agents ad extremum virium: D. CLARKSON, Pract. Wks., Nichol's Ed., Vol. iii. p. 28 (1865).

1641 So do the Geneva divines in their answer to the eight questions proposed to them, which are inserted among Zanchy's epistles lib. i. ad finem Epistolae 58: S. TORSHELL, Comm. Mal., Nichol's Ed., p. 281/2 (1865). 1700 Psalm xxii. 27, ad finem...was sweet and seasonable to my soul: T. BOSTON, Mem., Wks., Vol. xii. p. 110 (1854).

**ad hoc*, phr.: Lat.: 'for this' (special function or object).

1659 So that ad hoc the Magistrate is the only Judge what is sound doctrine: R. BAXTER, Key for Catholics, Pt. ii. ch. iv. p. 451. 1809 The conscripts are...examined...by a special commission, created ad hoc by the prefect: Edin.

Rev., Vol. 13, p. 433. 1835 Robespierre was for the second time chosen President of the Convention ad hoc: J. W. CROKER, Essays Fr. Rev., vi. p. 391 (1857). 1882 A sum not far off two millions per annum will have to be provided ad hoc by the Chancellor of the Exchequer: GREG, Misc. Essays, ch. vi. p. 147.

ad hominem, phr.: Lat.: 'to the person'; of an argument (often argumentum ad hom., g. v.) or appeal merely based on the habits, prejudices, or professions of the person addressed, almost equal to the adj. 'personal'. In reference to more persons than one, needlessly if not wrongly, ad homines.

1598 And this is an argument which logicians call ad hominem: R. PARSONS, Ward-Word to Hast. Watch-Word, Pt. vi. p. 79. 1630 we prove to divers persons who suppose & believe the one, & so (ad hominem) by that we prove the other: J. S., Triall of the Protestant Private Spirit, II. ch. viii. p. 304. 1680 What I can find in his sermon hath any aspect or design that way, is either ad rem, or ad hominem: J. HOWE, Wks., p. 173/1 (1834). 1765 There was great wit ad hominem in the latter reply: HOR. WALPOLE, Letters, Vol. IV. p. 349 (1857). 1883 The foregoing remarks...are in no sense directed ad homines: XIX Cent., Aug., p. 255.

1641 yet of the enigmatical use of it, see him, ad hunc locum, and in his Proem to the Minor Prophets: S. TORSELL, Comm. Mal., Nichol's Ed., p. 300/2 (1865).

ad idem, phr.: Lat.: 'to the same', on the same (point), in agreement.

1572 Hitherto you have proved nothing in question, neither have you reasoned ad idem: WHITGIFT, Wks., Vol. I. p. 404 (Parker Soc., 1851). 1674 The opposition is not ad idem: J. OWEN, Wks., Vol. II. p. 372 (Russell, 1826). 1885 The letters show that the parties were never ad idem: Law Times, May 30, Vol. LXXIX. p. 80/2.

1. adv. (often with ellipse):

1610 Nay, to a thousand, so ad infinitum: B. JONSON, Alch., II. i. Wks., p. 619 (1616). 1625 successively from one to another of the same kinde, ad infinitum: PURCHAS, Pilgrims, Vol. II. Bk. ix. p. 1479. bef. 1628 [fear] having no object to bound it, it runs on ad infinitum, and cannot be checked by any condition of life: FELTHAM, Resolves, Pt. I. p. 135 (1806). 1665 some have turnerack and saffron, other some none; some onions and garlick, some none: some having almonds and raisins, some none: and so ad infinitum: SIR TH. HERBERT, Trav., p. 310 (1677). 1733 And these have smaller still to bite 'em, | And so proceed ad infinitum: SWIFT, Wks., p. 604/2 (1869). 1749 and so ad infinitum: LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, Vol. I. No. 159, p. 412 (1774). 1804 Lord Lauderdale ridicules the idea of money increasing ad infinitum by compound interest: Edin. Rev., Vol. 4, p. 374. 1818 their less durable portraits by Lilly and Kneller have been copied ad infinitum in Ireland: LADY MORGAN, Fl. MacCarthy, Vol. I. ch. iv. p. 215 (1819). 1839 apparently endless avenues of arches, multiplied ad infinitum, on the right and left: MISS PARDOE, Beauties of the Bosph., p. 105. 1856 the rule of art is that a colonnade is more beautiful the longer it is, and that ad infinitum: EMERSON, English Traits, xvi. Wks., Vol. II. p. 127 (Bohn, 1866).

2. adj.:

1678 Nay then, thought I, if that you breed so fast, | I'll put you by yourselves, lest you at last | Should prove ad infinitum, and eat out | The book that I already am about: BUNYAN, Pilgrim's Progress, Author's Apology, p. 70. 1878 maps and guides ad infinitum: GERARDINE MACPHERSON, Life of Anna Jameson, p. 49.

ad ultimum, ad ultimum sui posse, ad ultimam potentiam, phr.: Lat.: to the utmost, to the utmost of one's power.

1674 That he doth not work as a natural agent, ad ultimum virium, to the utmost of his power: J. OWEN, Wks., Vol. II. p. 229 (Russell, 1826). 1677 that this power be put forth, not like that of a natural agent, ad ultimum, but gradually: J. HOWE, Wks., p. 126/1 (1834). 1681 Now nature, if it work as a natural agent, it doth always work ad ultimam potentiam, to the uttermost of his power...natural causes work ad ultimam potentiam, as the sun shines to the uttermost: TH. GOODWIN, Wks., in Nichol's Ser. Stand. Divines, Vol. II. p. 139 (1865). 1696 If he [Christ] should act infinitely, he should act ad ultimum sui posse, as natural agents do: D. CLARKSON, Pract. Wks., Nichol's Ed., Vol. III. p. 40 (1865). 1705 and which [power] therefore is not exerted ad ultimum, so as to do all that almighty power can do: J. HOWE, Wks., p. 297/2 (1834).

1598 Tut, no more of this surquedry: I am thine own ad unguem, upsie freeze, pell mell: B. JONSON, Case is All., IV. iii. p. 518 (1865). 1662 his diversion had been to learn by heart the four first books of Vergil's Ænids, which he had, as they say, ad unguem: J. DAVIES, Tr. Olearius, i. p. 21 (1669). 1668 I have it all ad unguem: DRYDEN, Mart. Marr-all, v. Wks., Vol. I. p. 220 (1701). abt. 1738 You are to be perfectly versed (ad unguem) in Weights and Measures, viz. twenty hundred weight make a tun...sixteen ounces is one pound; lower than which you need not go: G. SMITH, Compl. Body of Distil., Bk. I. p. 88 (3rd Ed.). 1767 Everything they write, in short, is polished ad unguem: JUNIUS, Letters, Vol. II. p. 124 (1887).

[The phrase is borrowed from sculpture. See HOR., Sat., I. v. 22, ad u. | factus homo.]

*ad valōrem, phr.: Low Lat.: Finance: 'according to value', of an impost which varies directly as the market value of the commodity taxed, opposed to specific; also an impost of this kind.

1698 That five pounds per annum, ad valorem, upon all returns from the East Indies, be paid by the importer: TINDAL, Contin. of Rapin, Vol. I. p. 369/2 (1751). 1722 the said duties payable ad valorem on all books bound: Stat. 9 Geo. I., ch. 19, § 6. bef. 1764 [the charge] was quid pro quo if no ad valorem: FIELDING, Wks., Vol. IV. p. 375 (1806). 1820 an ad valorem duty upon all the furniture in any man's possession: Edin. Rev., Vol. 33, p. 73. 1883 an 8 per cent ad valorem duty on exports: W. BLACK, Yolande, I. 18, p. 351. 1884 even the very pins in their garments have not escaped your specifics and *ad valorem*s: HON. S. S. COX, U. S. Congress. Record, Mar. 21, p. 2263/2. — have you not taxed them specifically and advaloremly from 50 to 100 and more per cent? ib.

1573—80 translated in a manner ad verbum, thus: GAB. HARVEY, Lett. Bk., p. 100 (1884). 1621 My translations are sometimes rather paraphrases than interpretations, non [not] ad verbum, but as an author I use more liberty, and that's only taken which was to my purpose: R. BURTON, Anat. Mel., To Reader, p. 12 (1867).

ad vitam aut (ad) culpam, phr.: Late Lat.: lit. 'to lifetime or fault', of a tenure held for life subject to good conduct.

Highness herself: L. HUNT, Autobiogr., IV. 105. [N.E.D.]

admonitus locorum, plur.: Lat.: suggestions of places, local associations.

1813 and the admonitus locorum can impart no gladness to the soul, while the traveller treads upon classic ground: Edin. Rev., Vol. 21, p. 131.

[Cf. CIC., de Fin., v. 2, 4, assentior usu hoc euenire, ut acrius aliquanto et attentius de claris uiris locorum admonitu

adobe, adobi, sb.: Sp. adobe: sun-dried bricks. In America called dobies.

1844 we gave a shout at the appearance on a little bluff of a neatly built adobe house with glass windows: FREMONT, Exp. to Oregon, p. 245 (1845).
1847 The slopes are revetted with adobes: Reconnaissance fr. Fort Leavenworth, p. 454 (1848). 1884 Towns...built of adobe: F. A. OBER, Trav. in Mexico,

2. adj.: growing towards maturity, becoming adult.

1784 Schools...Detain their adolescent charge too long; | The management of tiroes of eighteen | Is difficult: COWPER, Tirocin., Poems, Vol. II. p. 225 (1808).

1834 Even in their adolescent years...they have still only the sad prospect of wretchedness before them: H. CAUNTER, Scenes in India, 197.

Adon: Eng. fr. Fr. See Adonis.

*Adōnāi, Adōnay: Heb.: The Lord: lit. 'my lords'; name given in Old Test. to God, pronounced by the Jews in place of the ineffable name Jahveh or Jehovah.

abt. 1450 Adonay, thou God veray, | Thou here us when we to the calle:
Adonai: Everyman, in Dodsley-Hazlitt's Old Plays, Vol. I. p. 109 (1874).
1550 The Jewes read for that worde [Jehovah], Adonai, not that it cannot be expressed in their tongue, but for a reuerence to God's name: R. HUTCHINSON, Sermons, p. 7<sup>o</sup> (1560). 1584 these holie names of God, Tetragrammaton

PEELE, David and Bethsabe, p. 474<sup>1</sup>, l. 18 (1861). 1609 And my name Adonai I did not shew them: Douay Bible, Exodus, vi. 3. 1625 they cannot passe it, vntill the time appointed by Adonai (God Almighty.): PURCHAS, Pilgrims, Vol. II. Bk. ix. p. 1636. 1633 they sing many Tunes, and Adonai, they make the ordinary name of God: HOWELL, Lett., VI. xiv. p. 27 (1645).
1884 Hence when they [the Jews] meet with it [Jehovah] in the text they read
Adonai, or My Lord: LORD BRAYE, Pres. St. of Church, VI. p. 20. 1886 the Samaritans used the words Hash-Shem ('the name') in reading (just as
occurs in their Pentateuch: C. R. CONDER, Syrian Stone-Lore, IV. p. 161.

[Adōnāi, pl. with suff. of ādōn, = 'lord', cf. Adōnis. In allusion to the mourning for Adonis, Shelley called Keats
'Adonais' (= " = =) by an apparent confusion.]

adonic (= " = =), adj. and sb.: Eng. fr. Low Lat. or Fr.

I. adj.: relating to Adonis, of the metre called versus JONSON, Masques, Wks., Vol. II. p. 119 (1640). 1767 Sow the seed of hardy annual flowers [such as]...lupines, sweet-sultan, and flos-Adonis: J. ABERCROMBIE, Ev. Man own Gardener, p. 173 (1803).

[Lat. Adōnis, fr. Gk. Ἀδωνις, Ἀδων, fr. Phoen. ādōni, = 'my lord', fr. ādōn, = 'lord'; title of the Phoenician deity Tammuz. See Adonai.]

adonise (𐤀 𐤏), vb.: Eng. fr. Fr.: to make an Adonis of, to beautify. A playful word.

1611 Adoniser, to adonize it; to resemble Adonis; to imitate, or counterfeit the graces, or beaute of Adonis: COTGR. 1749 I employed three good hours at least in adjusting and adonizing myself: SMOLLETT, Gil Blas, vi. [R.] 1818 I must go and adonise a little myself: MISS FERRIER, Marriage, ch. ix. [Davies]

adopt (𐤀 𐤏), vb.: Eng. fr. Fr.: to choose (anything) for oneself, to make one's own, esp. to receive another's child as one's own child, to take into or onto one's self, to take up. As to foreign words, to 'adopt' means technically to take into use as English without avoidable change of form, opposed to 'adapt', = to borrow with change in conformity with English analogies.

1548 He did adopt to his heyre of all his realmes and dominions, Lewes the XI.: HALL, Hen. VII., an. 7. [R.] 1593 Richard...Adopts then heir: SHAKS., Rich. II., iv. 1, 109. 1604 I had rather to adopt a child than get it: — Oth., I. 3, 191. 1607 which, for your best ends, | You adopt your policy: — Coriol., III. 2, 48. 1664 — my gratitude to him...is even adopted into my religion: EVELYN, Corresp., Vol. III. p. 153 (1872). 1695 she never introduces foreign or adopted words: EVELYN, Corresp., Vol. IV. p. 6 (1872). bef. 1782 See the sage hermit, by mankind admir'd, | With all that bigotry adopts inspir'd: COWPER, Truth, Poems, Vol. I. p. 55 (1808). 1826 I have long been inclined to adopt the former notion, as most consistent with the phenomena: JOHN DALTON, in Phil. Trans., Pt. II. p. 174.

ador, sb.: Lat.: a kind of grain, spelt.

abt. 1420 In mene lande of ador or of whete, An acre lande to strikes IIII is mete: Palladius on Husbandry, x. 41. [N.E.D.] 1708 KERSEY.

1. the act of worshipping, addressing prayer to; intense devotional reverence.

1528 these ydoles faulcely lauded | With sacrifice and adoration: W. ROY & JER. BARLOWE, Rede me, &c., p. 106 (1871). 1545 And miche more execrable is it to serue or worship them [images] with any reuerent behauiour ether by adoration prostracion knelyng or kissing: GEO. JOYE, Exp. Dan., ch. III. [R.] 1600 entred into the church with great adoration and reverence: HOLLAND, Tr. Livy, Bk. v. p. 195. 1600 spirituall adoration, or worshipping: R. CAWDRAY, Treas. of Similies, p. 167. bef. 1658 Should we love Darkness, and abhor the Sun, | 'Cause Persians gave it Adoration: J. CLEVELAND, Wks., p. 319 (1687). 1671 whether there be anything in it [i.e. the doctrine of the Eucharist] signifying to adoration: EVELYN, Corresp., Vol. III. p. 231 (1872).

1 a. special. a mode of electing a pope, in which two-thirds of the Cardinals in Conclave make a low reverence to a Cardinal who is thereby created Pope.

1693 if Mellino might have been created Pope by Adoration (as formerly the Custom would have done it, but was crost by a new Bull): J. HACKET, Adp. Williams, Pt. I. 110, p. 99.

2. a manifestation of intense devotion for anything which is not an object of religious worship or reverence.

1600 [to love is to be] All adoration, duty, and observance: SHAKS., As Y. L. It., v. 2, 102 (1864). 1634 noble grace that dash'd brute violence | With sudden adoration, and blank awe: MILTON, Comus, 452. 1709 makes his submission to him with an humility next to adoration: ADDISON, Tatler, Feb. 14, Wks., Vol. II. p. 97 (1854).

adornment (𐤀 𐤏 𐤏), sb.: Eng. fr. Fr.

1. the act of adorning; the process or result of being adorned.

1480 He...made to her many fayre aornementis: CAXTON, Ovid's Metam., x. vi. [N.E.D.] 1611 such | The adornment of her bed: SHAKS., Cymb., II. 2, 26. 1659 such as cannot hope to contribute anything of value to the adornment of it: EVELYN, Diary, Vol. III. p. 111 (1872).

2. that which serves to adorn.

1485 adournements of precyous clothes: CAXTON, Chas. Grete, p. 208 (1881). 1638 Wants the adornments of the workman's cunning | To set the richness of the piece at view: FORD, Fancies Chaste & Noble, I. I. [R.] 1645 in a grove of trees...fountains...two Colosses...all of exquisite marble...and other suitable adornments: EVELYN, Diary, Vol. I. p. 187 (1872).

[From Old Fr. aornement, adournement.]

Adrastia: Lat. fr. Gk. Ἀδράστεια: Gk. Mythol.: a name of Nemesis (q. v.), the divine punisher of pride and wickedness.

1609 [of Eusebius] Adrastia, that beholdeth mens doings, plucking him first by the ears (as they say) and admonishing him to live more reformed, when he strived againe and made resistance, threw headlong down as it were from a certaine high and steepe rocke: HOLLAND, Tr. Marc., Lib. 22, ch. II. p. 191. 1611 But the Lady Adrastia (I meane the just vengeance of God) pursued these impious blood-suckers: T. CORVAT, Crudities, Vol. II. p. 249 (1776).

Adrastus: Lat. fr. Gk. Ἀδραστος: Gk. Mythol.: King of Argos, leader of the expedition of the Seven against Thebes.

abt. 1509 In whome dothe wele acorde | Alexis yonge of age, | Adrastus wise and sage: J. SKELTON, Wks., Vol. I. p. ix. (1843).

*adroit (𐤀 𐤏), adj.: Eng. fr. Fr. adroit: dexterous, ready, capable of quick and varied movement, clever, crafty, shifty.

1652 the best esteemed and most adroit cavalry in Europe: EVELYN, France. [R.] 1679 He held his Talent most Adroit | For any Mystical Exploit: S. BUTLER, Hudibras, Pt. III. Cant. I. p. 20. 1685 this quondam Duke...being extremely handsome and adroit: EVELYN, Diary, Vol. II. p. 238 (1872). 1751 you will do well...to be adroit at it [fencing]: LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, Vol. II. No. 38, p. 166 (1774). 1872 The adroit firmness of Charles rescued his brother from the impending blow of the Exclusion Bill: J. L. SANDFORD, Estimates of Eng. Kings, p. 413.

*adscriptus (𐤀 𐤏 -ti) glēbae, ascripticius (𐤀 𐤏 -ti) glebae, adstrictus (𐤀 𐤏 -ti) glebae, phr.: Late Lat.: assigned, bound to the soil, a serf.

1824 The ascriptio glebae [bondage to the soil] still exists in Hungary: Edin. Rev., Vol. 40, p. 307. 1841 Such tenants of the king's demesnes have the privilege that they cannot be removed from the land while they do the service due; and these villein-socmen are properly called glebae ascriptitii. They perform villein services, but such as are certain and determined: STEPHEN, Tr. Bracton, in New Comm. on Laws of Engl., Bk. II. Pt. I. ch. 2, p. 188 (1874). 1843 the labouring classes were...reduced to the condition of adscripti glebae: CRAIK and MACFARLANE, Pict. Hist. Eng., Vol. III. p. 772a. 1850 These paupers were, in fact, or claimed to be, the original adscripti glebae, and to have as much claim to parish support as the landed proprietor had to his land: Household Words, Aug. 10, p. 468/2. 1876 the coloni inquilini, and adscriptitii or censiti...were serfs enjoying a certain amount of personal freedom, but fixed to the soil, compelled to cultivate it, and inseparable from it: W. A. HUNTER, Roman Law, p. 17.

adsum, vb.: Lat.: 'I am present', used at many schools as the answer when the names are called over.

1598 [After an invocation] Spirit. Adsum: SHAKS., II Hen. VI., i. 4, 26. 1854 At the usual evening hour the chapel bell began to toll, and Thomas Newcome's hands outside the bed feebly beat time. And just as the last bell struck, a peculiar sweet smile shone over his face, and he lifted up his head a little, and quickly said, "Adsum!" and fell back. It was the word we used at school, when names were called over; and lo, he, whose heart was as that of a little child, had answered to his name, and stood in the presence of The Master: THACKERAY, Newcomes, Vol. II. ch. xlii. p. 445 (1879). 1887 "The graves of the household"...have more than their counterpart in the graves of the school, and at Col. Fergusson's muster-roll the voices that should call "Adsum" are often still: Athenaeum, Dec. 10, p. 781/2.

[bef. 1529 maister Adulator, | And doctour Assentator: J. SKELTON, Col. Clout, 681, Wks., Vol. I. p. 337 (1843).] 1696 Adulator, a flatterer, a fawning Fellow, a Claw-back: PHILLIPS, World of Words. bef. 1704 An adulator pleases and prepossesses them with his dawning: T. BROWN, Wks., IV. 305. (Davies) 1794 A Court adulator, when he found his credit on the decline, often displayed an inventive ingenuity to attract the variable dispositions of his idol: Domest. Anecd. of French Nat., p. 157. 18... a Grand Monarque walking encircled with scarlet women and adulators there: CARLYLE, Misc., IV. 75. (Davies) 1887 The adulators who swarmed round Mr. Balfour at Evesham Station corroborated...the truth of this distinction: Manchester Exam., Dec. 6, p. 5/3.

*Adullam: Heb.: name of a place in the land of Judah noted for its cave; cf. 1 Sam., xxii. Hence Adullamite (see quotations fr. J. Bright's Speeches and Dixon's Spirit Wives), Adullamy.

1814 he could not but have an excellent opinion of them, since they resembled precisely the followers who attached themselves to the good King David at the cave of Adullam: videlicet, every one that was in distress, and every one that was in debt, and every one that was discontented: SCOTT, Wav., ch. lvii. p. 376 (188-). 1866 The right hon. gentleman is the first of the new party who has expressed his great grief, who has retired into what may be called his political Cave of Adullam, and he has called about him "every one that was in distress and every one that was discontented": J. BRIGHT, Speeches, p. 349 (1876). 1868 Prince...hired a place...which he called Adullam Chapel, and began to gather...a congregation who were quickly known in all the dowager tea-rooms as the Adullamites: W. H. DIXON, Spirit Wives, Vol. I. p. 293. 1872 Whigs may again commit Adullamy against Gladstone: J. A. PARTRIDGE, From Feudal to Federal.

1587 When he first took shipping to Lacedæmon, That adulter I mean: Lyrics, &c., in Eng. Garner, II. 84. [N. E. D.] 1645 It would be strange that he...should become an adulter by marrying one who is now no other man's wife: MILTON, Tetrach., 244 (1851). [N. E. D.]

adulterator ( $\angle = \angle = \angle =$ ), sb.: Eng. fr. Late Lat.

1632 The adulterator of his Souveraignes bed: HEYWOOD, Iron Age, II. iv. i. 411. [N. E. D.]

Æolian, Eolian (æ ð = ð), adj.: Eng.

1. adj. to Æolus (q. v.): borne by the wind.

1603 Th' Æolian Crowd obeys his [God's] mighty call: J. SYLVESTER, Tr. Du Bartas, Arke, p. 323 (1608). 1646 Whether there be Æolian Nutmegs: SIR TH. BROWN, Pseud. Ep., Bk. II. ch. iii. p. 58 (1686).

1 a. Æolian harp, a rude stringed instrument intended to produce musical sounds when wind blows on the strings; hence Æolian sometimes is used as adj. to Æolian harp.

1754 Some years ago, a twelve-stringed instrument was contrived by a very ingenious musician, by whom it was aptly entitled the harp of Æolus, because being properly applied to a stream of air, it produces a wild irregular variety of harmonious sounds: SMOLLETT, Ferd. Ct. Fathom, ch. xxxiv. Wks., Vol. IV. p. 190 (1817). 1776 Kircher [d. 1680] mentions a contrivance of his own, an instrument, which a few years ago was obtruded on the public as a new invention, and called the harp of Æolus: SIR J. HAWKINS, Hist. Mus., Vol. IV. Bk. II. ch. vi. p. 218. 1832 Like an Æolian harp that wakes | No certain air: TENNYSON, Two Voices, Wks., Vol. I. p. 136 (1886).

2. adj. to Æolis, the North-west coast of Asia Minor and the adjacent islands, in which region the early lyric poetry of the Greeks flourished; hence, lyric.

1671 Æolian charms and Dorian lyric odes: MILTON, P. R., IV. 257. 1757 Awake, Æolian lyre, awake, | And give to rapture all thy trembling strings: GRAY, Progr. of Poesy, I. 1. 1776 [ancient modes] The graver Lydian, called also the Hist.: SIR J. HAWKINS, Hist. Mus., Vol. I. Bk. I. ch. ix. p. 131.

Æolic (æ ð = ð), adj. to Æolis. See Æolian 2.

1674 The Æolic Mood, was that which was of a more Airy and soft pleasing sound: PLAYFORD, Skill of Mus., I. 59. [N. E. D.] 1738 The Æolic Dialect generally throws out the aspirate or sharp spirit: CHAMBERS, Cycl. 1885 All the work in this cup's filled in with leaves of acanthus; | 'Tis an Æolic thing—and sooth, of a wonderful fancy: EDWIN ARNOLD, Tr. Theocr., in Secret of Death, &c., p. 368 (3rd Ed.).

*Æolus, Eolus: Lat.: the god of the winds in Greek and Latin Mythology, in Gk. Αἰόλος, whose home was Æoliā, a floating island near Sicily (according to the Odyssey), which Latin writers identified with Strongylē, one of the Lipari Islands. Used as the name of a ventilator; see Encyc. Brit., Suppl. (1801).

1589 Æolus in poepe gaue her wether at will: PUTTENHAM, Eng. Poes., I. xxvii. 1590 That nether Phœbus beams could through them throng, | Nor Æolus sharp blast could worke them any wrong: SPENS., F. Q., III. vi. 44. 1590 Neptune leagu'd with Æol, marr'd the seaman's glee: GREENE, Poems, p. 300/1, l. 24 (1861). 1594 thou...like the mustering breath of Æolus | That ouerturns the pines of Lebanon, | Hast scatter'd Jewry: — Looking Glass, Wks., sig. A 5<sup>v</sup>/2. 1630 Or bellows helps for Eol's breath to blow: JOHN TAYLOR, Wks., sig. A 5<sup>v</sup>/2. 1639 Do, do rage on! rend open, Æolus, | Thy brazen prison, and let loose at once | Thy stormy issue: MASSINGER, Unnat. Combat, v. 2, Wks., p. 47/1 (1830). 1646 Whosoever was the Author, the Æolus that blew it about was Fam. Strada: SIR TH. BROWN, Pseud. Ep., Bk. II. ch. iii. p. 58 (1686). 1648 They [trees] can abide the blasts of Æolus: W. LAWSON, Orchard & Garden, ch. ix. p. 24 (1688). 1784 but since Boreas and Æolus, and all the demons of the air, are let loose, I shall keep myself as warm as I can: HOR. WALPOLE, Letters, Vol. VIII. p. 530 (1858). 1819 And ELDON beg a favouring gale | From Eolus, that older Bags, | To speed thee on thy destin'd way: Tom Crib's Mem., p. 67 (3rd Ed.). 1888 Instead of offering up propitiatory sacrifices to the Æolus and Neptune of these stormy waters they ship on each big junk a crew of over one hundred men: Athenæum, Mar. 24, p. 366/2.

Variants, 16 c. Æol (fr. Fr. Éole, Éole), 17 c. Eol(e), 17 c.—19 c. Eolus.

1598 some birds which they call Alcatraces: Tr. J. Van Linschoten's Voyages, Bk. I. Vol. II. p. 248 (1885).

[Orig. meaning pelican, applied by voyagers to sundry large sea-birds of at least three distinct orders. According to Devic Port. alcatraz is a variation of Port. alcatruz, = 'a pelican', sometimes 'a gannet', orig. 'a bucket' of a noria or water-wheel for irrigation, Sp. alcaduz and arcaduz, fr. Arab. al-qādūs, which in turn is Gk. kādos. The Arabs now call the pelican saggā, = 'water carrier', from the idea that it carries water in the pouch of its great beak. Alcatraz was changed in Dutch or English to albitros (in Eng. 17 c. alगतross), albetross, albatross, and applied to Diomedea, very large sea-birds allied to petrels (order Tubinares).]

alcavala, sb.: Sp.: an ad valorem (q. v.) duty of ten per cent. or more formerly charged in Spain and its colonies on all transfers of property.

Variants, 15 c. malgam, 17 c. amalagma.

[Low Lat. amalagma, whence Fr. amalgame, is probably (like alembroth) an alchemist's coinage or corruption; perhaps, as Bacon thought, suggested by Lat. malagma, fr. Gk. μάλαγμα, = 'an emollient', fr. μαλάσσειν, = 'to soften'. Perhaps fr. Arab. malgham, = 'emollient'. Otherwise Devic in Littré, Suppl.]

amalgamator (= al = al =), sb.: Eng.: one who arranges an association; the apparatus used for separating silver from its ore by forming a chemical amalgam.

[As if noun of agent to Late Lat. amalgamāre, = 'to amalgamate', used for the more correct form amalgamater.]

Amalthaea's horn: Gk. Mythol.: the horn of plenty, or cornucopias (q. v.), one of the horns of Amalthaea, the goat which suckled Zeus (Jupiter), given by him to the Nymphs to whom it yielded whatever they desired.

[1603 But he who hath once gotten the goat Amalthæa by the head, and that plentifull horne of abundance which the Stoicks talke of, he is rich incontinently: HOLLAND, Tr. Plut. Mor., p. 1056.] 1626 Amalthæan horne, Plenty of all things: COCKERAM, Pt. I. (2d. Ed.). 1671 fruits and flow'rs from Amalthæa's horn: MILTON, P. R., II. 356. 1705 In short, here is the true Amalthæa or Cornucopia, of which the Antients have said so many fine things: Tr. Bosman's Guinea, Let. xx. p. 416.

amant, fem. amante, sb.: Fr.: a lover.

1828 In Paris, no woman is too old to get an amant, either by love or money: LD. LYTTON, Peckham, ch. xxi. p. 54 (1859).

amantium irae amōris integratio est: Lat.: a lover's quarrel is the renewal of love. Terence, Andria, iii. 3, 23.

1621 A. i. a. redintegratio: R. BURTON, Anat. Mel., Pt. 3, Sec. 2, Mem. 3, Subs. 4, Vol. II, p. 270 (1827). 1681–1703 TH. GOODWIN, Wks., in Nichol's Ser. Stand. Divines, Vol. VII, p. 191 (1863). 1860 Once a Week, Apr. 7, p. 318/2.

*amanuensis, pl. amanuenses (= ㄥ ㄥ ㄥ), sb.: Eng. fr. Lat. amanuensis: one who is employed to write from dictation or to copy.

1621 such benefactors, as that noble Ambrosius was to Origen, allowing him six or seven amanuenses to write out his dictates: R. BURTON, Anat. Mel., To Reader, p. 17 (1827). 1666–7 your amanuensis has committed some sphalmatas: EVELYN, Corresp., Vol. III, p. 90 (1872). 1664 give his full mind in writing...even he himself would do it without the help of an Amanuensis: J. WORTHINGTON, Life, in Jos. Mede's Wks., p. xxviii. 1666 the names of Seria or Siria (doubtless mistaken by the Amanuensis or in the transcript): SIR TH. HERBERT, Trav., p. 354 (1677). 1693 But one month in the Autumn began it, and ended it, as not only the Author, but the Amanuensis testified: J. HACKET, Abp. Williams, Pt. II, 106, p. 109. 1712 he had recourse to the Invention above mentioned, having placed an Amanuensis in a private part of the Room: Spectator, No. 371, May 6, p. 545/1 (Morley). bef. 1733 He was his Lordship's Secretary or Amanuensis sure: R. NORTH, Examen, i. i. 12, p. 20 (1740).

1750 The writer, indeed, seems to think himself obliged to keep even pace with Time, whose amanuensis he is: FIELDING, Tom Jones, Bk. II, ch. i. Wks., Vol. VI, p. 65 (1806). 1787 Ladies...always slept in an adjoining apartment, to be in readiness as amanuenses, in case her Muse was taken in labour during the still season of the night: Gent. Mag., p. 885/2. 1850 could write perfectly well, and had no need of an amanuensis: THACKERAY, Pendennis, Vol. I, ch. xxiv, p. 255 (1879). *1877 Good reader and amanuensis: Times, Dec. 10 [St.]. 1881 What was actually written on parchment or papyrus by the author of the book or his amanuensis: WESTCOTT & HORT, Gk. Test., Intr., ¶ 3, p. 3.

[The Lat. amanuensis is found only in Suetonius, formed from ā manū, and meaning servus ā manū, = 'servant on-the-side-of the hand' (apparently on the analogy of atriensis, = 'hall (atrium) steward', and castrensis, forensis, adj.), with the suffix -ensis generally used to form local and national names from names of places and countries.]

amāracus, sb.: Lat.: marjoram (Anglicised in 15 c. as amarac); also Mod. Bot., Dittany of Crete (Origanum dictamnus).

1830 And at their feet the crocus brake like fire, | Violet, amaracus, and asphodel, | Lotos and lilies: TENNYSON, Enone, 95 (1886).

amaranthus, amarant(h), sb.: Lat., and Eng. fr. Lat. The adj. amarant(h), = 'of a purple color', named from a purple species of the flower, is fr. the Fr. amarante.

1. name of a genus of plants; see quotations. Love-lies-bleeding, and Purple Flower-Gentle or Prince's feather, are among the many species.

1548 There are two kinds of Amarantus, the one kinde is called in greeke of Dioscorides Helichryson, and this kynde is found in Italy. The other kynde is called here in Englande of some purple Veluet floure, of other flouromore: W. TURNER, Names of Herbs. 1590 Sad Amaranthus, in whose purple gore | Me seemes I see Amintas wretched fate: SPENS., F. Q., III, vi. 45. 1601 Of Amarantus or Pass-velours: HOLLAND, Tr. Plin. N. H., Bk. 21, ch. 8, Vol. II, p. 88. — a purple spike this is [purple floure-gentle]...serves all winter long to make chaplets & guirlands...Amaranthus, for so it is called in Greeke, because it never doth fade or wither: ib., p. 89. 1627 The Herb Amaranthus, (indeed, is Red all ouer: BACON, Nat. Hist., Cent. vii. § 641. 1658 In strewing their Tombs the Romans affected the Rose, the Greeks Amaranthus and myrtle: SIR TH. BROWN, Hydriotaph., p. 56. 1664 sow on the Hot-bed... some choice Amaranthus, Dactylis, Geranium's: EVELYN, Kal. Hort., p. 197 (1729). 1706 Amaranthus, and eglantines, | With intermingling sweets, have wove | The parti-coloured gay alcove: ADDISON, Wks., Vol. I, p. 65 (Bohn, 1854). 1767 A hot-bed may now be made...in which to sow the seeds of tender annual flowers, such as cockscomb, amaranthus, egg-plant, &c.: J. ABERCROMBIE, Ev. Man own Gardener, p. 171 (1803).

2. an imaginary fadeless flower, emblem of immortality.

1637 Bid amaranthus all his beauty shed, | And daffodillies fill their cups with tears: MILTON, Lycidas, 149. 1667 Immortal amarant, a flow'r which once | In Paradise, fast by the tree of life, | Began to bloom: — P. L., III, 353 (1770).

amāre simul et sapere ipsi Jovi non datur: Lat.: to be in love and be wise at the same time is not granted to Jove.

[1580 to be wise, and Loue, is a worke for a God, or a Goddes peere: Three Proper Letters, in Haslewood's Eng. Poets & Poesy, Vol. II, p. 273 (1815).] 1621 R. BURTON, Anat. Mel., To Reader, p. 104 (1827). — Amare, &c., as Seneca holds: ib., Pt. 3, Sec. 2, Mem. 4, Subs. 1, Vol. II, p. 312. 1883 Amare et sapere vix deo conceditur [to be in love and be wise is hardly granted to a god]: E. BRADDON, Golden Calf, Vol. II, ch. iv, p. 111.

amāri aliquid, phr.: Lat.: 'somewhat of bitter', a slight bitter taste, lit. or metaph. From Lucr., iv. 1133, medio de fonte leporum | surgit amari aliquid quod in ipsis floribus angat, = 'out of the very well-spring of delights rises up something of bitter, to pain amid the very flowers'.

bef. 1863 Novels having been previously compared to jellies—here are two (one perhaps not entirely saccharine, and flavoured with an amari aliquid very distasteful to some palates): THACKERAY, Roundabout Papers, p. 7 (1879). 1860 surgit [there rises up] amari aliquid: W. H. RUSSELL, Diary, Vol. I, p. 102. 1883 this is a novel which will be read with avidity and keen pleasure by all epicures in fiction, who know how to enjoy what is good, and to forget the amari aliquid which silly souls allow to poison a delicate repast: Standard, Sept. 22, p. 2/2.

1490 Thou haste absorbed me and reclosed in the grete see of amarytude: CAXTON, Eneydos, xxvi. 94. [N. E. 1. a lover, an enthusiastic admirer.

1784 The President will be left with his train of feeble Amateurs: Europ. Mag., 268. [N. E. D.] 1814 Never did music sound sweeter to an amateur, than the drowsy tautology, with which old Janet detailed every circumstance, thrilled upon the ears of Waverley: SCOTT, Wav., ch. lxx. p. 428 (188-). 1822 another pen, [which] soon found another amateur, who would have it to himself: L. SIMOND, Switzerland, Vol. I, p. 3.

2. one who follows any pursuit unprofessionally as a pastime; hence, a mere trifler with work or study.

abt. 1790 It must always be, to those who are the greatest amateurs or even professors of revolutions, a matter very hard to prove, that the late French government was so bad, that nothing worse, in the infinite devices of men, could come in its place: BURKE, [T.] 1795 those frivolous geniuses usually styled amateurs or connoisseurs: Gent. Mag., Jan., i. p. 24/2. 1805 many copies of it have been in circulation among the poetical amateurs of this literary metropolis: Edin. Rev., Vol. 5, p. 439. 1807 it was not likely that an amateur, however distinguished, should convict these astronomers of gross ignorance: ib., Vol. 10, p. 461. 1813 she was sitting with her back to the door, surrounded by a crowd of amateurs: M. EDGEWORTH, Patronage, Vol. I, p. 84 (1833). 1816 what with mountebanks, Counts and friseurs, | Some numbers by trade, and the rest amateurs: T. 1829 AMATI, a violin maker of Cremona, who lived about the year 1600, and by his own and his family's skill gave name to the Amati violins, which are still considered, with the exception perhaps of Stainer's, the first in the world: Lond. Encycl. 1885 There is an Amati, date 1679, formerly the property of the old glee writer, Stevens: Daily News, Aug. 17, p. 6/1.

*amaurosis, sb.: Late Lat. fr. Gk. ἀμαύρωσις: partial or total loss of sight usually without disfigurement of the eye, owing to a diseased state of the retina; Anglicised through Fr. amafroise by Sylvester; also called gutta serena, q. v.

1603 then she is backt | By th' Amafrose and cloudy Cataract: | That, gathering vp gross humors inwardly | In th' Optike sinnew, clean puts out the eye: J. SYLVESTER, Tr. Du Bartas, Furies, p. 276 (1608). 1696 Amaurosis, a disease in the Eyes, viz. when the sight is gone, and no fault to be seen: PHILLIPS, World of Words. 1834 but never perhaps did these amaurosis suffusions so cloud and distort his otherwise most piercing vision, as in this of the Dandiacal body! CARLYLE, Sartor Resartus, Bk. III. ch. x. [C. E. D.] 1843 Amaurosis is a very obscure disease. It is capable of being caused by various changes, the exact seat and nature of which we often have no means of determining during life: T. WATSON, Principles & Pract. of Physic, Vol. I. p. 332.

*Amazon (Λ = -): Eng. fr. Lat.

1. one of a mythical race of female warriors, Gk. Ἀμαζόνες, supposed by Greek poets and early Greek historians to have lived in Scythia near the river Thermōdon, and to have destroyed the right breast (Ἀμαζών being supposed to be fr. ἀ- = 'not', and μαστός = 'breast'), for convenience in using the bow. Hence the adj. Amazonian, Amazonical. Spenser's 'land of Amazons' is rather romantically than classically mythological.

1590 Well kend him... Th' enchaunter by his armes and amenance, | When under him he saw his Lybian steed to prounce: SPENS., F. Q., II. viii. 17. 1633 And with grave speech and grateful amenance | Himself, his state, his spouse, to them commended: P. FLETCHER, Purp. Isl., xi. 9. [Nares]

[Fr. amenance, noun of action to amener, = 'to lead to', 'bring to', fr. ā, prep., = 'to', and mener, = 'to drive', fr. Lat. mināre, = 'to threaten'.]

**amende*, sb.: Fr.: reparation.

1. a payment in satisfaction for an injury. Rare. Sing. of amendes whence Eng. 'amends'.

1724 I claimed the said bills, which came to not above twelve thousand livres for my amende: DE FOR, Roxana, p. 47 (1875).

2. short for amende honorable.

1808 I make my amende, said she: H. MORE, Catebs in search of a Wife, Vol. I. ch. xvii. p. 238 (1809). 1832 The Chancellor, in one of his most bungling ways, made what he meant to be a sort of amende to Sugden: Greville Memoirs, Vol. II. ch. xviii. p. 316 (1875). 1868 he also made a kind of amende: MRS. OLIPHANT, Brownings, Vol. III. p. 151. 1887 He has made his amende, not in a contrite spirit: Athenæum, Apr. 30, p. 570/1.

**amende honorable*, phr.: Fr.: honorable reparation, orig. public acknowledgment of crime; now, a satisfactory apology for an insult or offence. Anglicised in 18 c. as 'amend(amand)-honourable'.

1613 was condemned by the Judge of the Chatelet to make an amende honorable before the court, and another before the Nuncio: T. LORKIN, in Court & Times of Jas. I., Vol. I. p. 268 (1848). 1765 You see how just I am, and ready to make amende honorable to your ladyship: HOR. WALPOLE, Letters, Vol. IV. p. 403 (1857). 1781 As you have made amende honorable for your indolence, it is but equitable on my side to absolve you: ib., Vol. VIII. p. 24 (1858). 1808 In the preface to the Fables, he makes the amende honorable: SCOTT, Wks. of Dryden, Vol. I. p. 426. 1829 he... makes the amende honorable to Popery and Popish divines: Edin. Rev., Vol. 50, p. 132. 1831 it is not only a duty, but a pleasure, to make the 'amende honorable': Congress, Debates, Vol. VII. p. 623. 1877 he was not held to have duly made the amende honorable to the Church, and the clergy of Paris denied him sepulture: COL. HAMLEY, Voltaire, ch. xxvi. p. 202.

America, the great continent of the Western Hemisphere, named from Amerigo Vespucci who sailed along part of the coast in 1499. The name is now applied more and more, like its derivatives, to the United States of North America.

?1511 but that lande is not nowe knowne for there haue no masters wryten therof nor it knowethe and it is named Armerica: Of the newe landes, in Arber's First Three Eng. Bks. on Amer., p. xxvii. (1885). 1655 For it was not yet known, whether that great region of America, (whiche they call the fyrrme or mayne lande) dyd separate the Weste sea from the East: R. EDEN, Newe India, p. 32 (Arber, 1885).

Hence American, adj., pertaining to the continent of America, to the original natives of America (also sb.), to the British Colonies in America, or to the United States (also sb.); Americanism, sb., sympathy with the United States, a characteristic (of the habits or speech) of the United States; Americomania, sb., craze (see mania) for the people, habits, and customs of the United States.

amiant(h)us, sb.: Lat.

1. a white fibrous variety of asbestos, the fibres of which can be woven. Anglicised in modern poetry as amianth.

1600 As the precious stone called Amianthon, being cast into the fire, is made more clearer and purer: R. CAWDRAY, Treas. of Similies, p. 7. 1601 The amiant stone is like unto Alume, and being put into the fire, looseth nothing of the substance: HOLLAND, Tr. Plin. N. H., Bk. 36, ch. 19, Vol. II, p. 589. 1607 This kinde of web rather cometh of a kinde of flax that Pliny writeth of, or rather of the Amiantus-stone, called the Asbest, which...being cast into a fire, seems to be forthwith all in a flame, but being taken out again, it shineth the more gloriously: TOPSELL, Serpents, 749. 1646 he showed us...divers things of woven amianthus: EVELYN, Diary, Vol. I, p. 236 (1872). 1671 a great quantity of that Lanuginous Stone, called Amianthus, which he knows so to prepare, as to render it so tractable and soft, that it resembleth well enough a very fine Lamb-skin dressed white: Phil. Trans., Vol. VI, No. 72, p. 2167. 1677 The stone is called Asbestos, i.e. Unextinguishable: but the linnen or stuff Amianthus: SIR TH. HERBERT, Trav., p. 309. 1691 The Amianthus [is remarkable] for its incombustibility: J. RAY, Creation, Pt. I, p. 105 (1701). 1787 Examine the Amiantus, a mineral substance, of woolly texture, endowed with the wonderful property of resisting fire; from which the ancients made a kind of cloth, to preserve the ashes of the bodies that they burnt: P. BECKFORD, Lett. fr. Ital., Vol. I, p. 175 (1805).

2. a greenish, fibrous kind of chrysolite.

[From Gk. ἀμιαντος, = 'undefiled', 'amianth-stone' which is undefiled by fire. The termination is wrongly accommodated to -anthus fr. Gk. ἄθος, = 'bloom'. The Fr. amiente was early Anglicised as amiant(h), adj., see quot. fr. Holland.]

amicizia, sb.: It.: friendship, love-affair, intrigue. Akin to amity (q. v.).

HERBERT, Trav., p. 191. — the Amoroza's [Amoroza's in Ed. 1665], or those of the order of Lais...be more sociable, have most freedom, and in this Region are not worst esteemed of: ib., p. 300. 1817 the brother of my amorosa: BYRON, in Moore's Life, Vol. III. p. 340 (1832).

amorosi, pl. of amorosa and amoroso, sb.: It.

1817 I have seen some ancient figures of eighty pointed out as amorosi of forty, fifty, and sixty years' standing. I can't say I have ever seen a husband and wife so coupled: BYRON, in Moore's Life, Vol. III. p. 363 (1832).

*amoroso, pl. amorosi (q. v.), sb.: It.: an amorous man, a lover.

bef. 1670 an Amorofo, that wasts his whole time in Dalliance upon his Mistress: J. HACKET, Abp. Williams, Pt. I. 138, p. 125 (1693). 1817 There is no convincing a woman here that she is in the smallest degree deviating from the rule of right or the fitness of things in having an amoroso: BYRON, in Moore's Life, Vol. III. p. 333 (1832).

amoroso, adv.: It.: Mus.: in a soft and amorous style.

1776 I was playing in a tone somewhat amoroso: J. COLLIER, Mus. Trav., p. 73 (4th Ed.). 1813 AMOROSO, in the Italian music, implies tenderly, with affection and supplication: Pantologia. 1848 RIMBAULT, Pianoforte, p. 90.

amort (= us), adj.: Eng. fr. Fr.: nearly dead. See à la mort.

1608 A'mort man? what can Polymetes daunt? J. DAY, Law-Tricks, sig. I 2<sup>ro</sup>. 1619 She counts him but a Nazard, halfe a-mort: H. HUTTON, Foll. Anat., sig. B 6<sup>ro</sup>. 1840 Untasked of any love, His sensitiveness idled, now amort, Alive now: BROWNING, Sordello, vi. Wks., Vol. III. p. 435 (1863). [N. E. D.]

[The Fr. à mort = 'to death', 'mortally', as does Fr. à la mort. The Eng. adj. amort and a-la-mort show the same change of meaning; so that amort may be fr. the corruption all amort or from Fr. à mort (with a reminiscence of all amort).]

*amortissement, sb.: Fr.: mortification, extinction of a debt or charge, esp. by means of a sinking-fund.

1882 The sum yearly set aside for the amortissement of the Debt has been already expended in buying up bonds: Standard, Dec. 19, p. 5.

amotine, vb.: Eng. fr. Sp. amotinar: to raise in mutiny.

1578 Who had comen to Vera Crux to amotine the Towne: T. N., Tr. Cong. W. India, 245. [N. E. D.]

1523 the adventures of amours and of war: LORD BERNERS, Froissart, Vol. I. ch. xiv. p. 202 (1812). 1590 But lovely peace, and gentle amity, | And In Amours the passing howres to spend, | The mightie martiall handes doe most commend: SPENS., F. Q., II. vi. 35. 1600 fortunate in the amours of three hundred fortie and five ladies: B. JONSON, Cynth. Rev., I. 3, Wks., p. 192 (1616). 1669 Jealousies and disquiets are the dregs of an Amour: DRYDEN, Mock Astron., II. Wks., Vol. I. p. 290 (1701). 1679 'Tis true, no Lover has that Pow'r | T' enforce a desperate Amour, | As he that has two Strings to 's Bow, | And turns for Love and Money too: S. BUTLER, Hudibras, Pt. III. Cant. I. p. 1. 1714 all my Amours have hitherto been with Ladies: Spectator, No. 596, Sept. 20, p. 840/2 (Morley). 1743 I perceived Mr. Jackson...and, inquiring into the state of his amour, understood it was still undetermined: SMOLLETT, Rod. Rand., ch. xvii. Wks., Vol. I. p. 97 (1817).

2. more commonly, an unworthy passion, illicit union, intrigue.

1590 I will...discourse vnto you the ende of Francescoes amours, of his returne home to his wife, and his repentance: GREENE, Never Too Late, Wks., Vol. VIII. p. 109 (Grosart). 1666 the Nayro many times makes that his opportunity to visit and act his Amours: SIR TH. HERBERT, Trav., p. 337 (1677). 1667 court-amours, | Mix'd dance, or wanton mask, or midnight ball: MILTON, *P. NORTH, Examen, I. i. 27, p. 28 (1740). 1742 Oh Love of Gold! thou meaneest of Amours: E. YOUNG, Night Thoughts, IV. p. 62 (1773). 1743-7 He was still wandering from one amour to another: TINDAL, Contin. Rapin, Vol. I. p. 491/1 (1751). 1788 he [the King] always made her [the Queen] the confidante of his amours: HOR. WALPOLE, Letters, Vol. I. p. cxxxiv. (1857).

[Reintroduced in 17 c. when the old Anglicised amour, amours (introd. 14 c. or earlier) was obsolete or nearly so, after having changed its accent to that found in Eng. enamour, and sometimes appearing by accommodation to Lat. as amor. The Mid. Eng. amour, = 'lover', is distinct, being fr. Old Fr. ameor, ameour, fr. Lat. amatōrem.]

**amour propre*, phr.: Fr.: 'self love' in its social aspect, self-esteem which desires that the merits of which it is conscious should meet with full recognition from others.

1808 to be admired by her, gratified his amour propre: H. MORE, Celebs in search of a Wife, Vol. I. ch. x. p. 125 (1809). 1811 egotism...is rendered by 'amour propre', rather than by 'egoisme': Edin. Rev., Vol. 18, p. 124. 1817 I used to think that I was a good deal of an author in amour propre: BYRON, in Moore's Life, Vol. IV. p. 72 (1832). 1851 The King did not wish for M. d'Agout's company, either from a pique of amour propre that made him jealous of appearing in leading-strings, or from some other such motive: J. W. CROKER, Essays Fr. Rev., III. p. 119 (1857). 1858 a sin against our own amour propre: A. TROLLOPE, Three Clerks, Vol. III. ch. I. p. 8. 1878 There was nothing... which was likely to affect his amour propre: G. ELIOT, Dan. Deronda, Bk. III. ch. xxvii. p. 223.

1825 This comes of meddling with men's amourettes: SCOTT, Betrothed, ch. xxxvi. p. 257. 1826 LORD BEACONSFIELD, Viv. Grey, Bk. I. ch. vii. p. 17 (1881).

1598 I humbly beseech your good Lordship to entertaine this booke vnder your Hon. ampare: YONG, Diana, Ded. [N. E. D.]

**ampelopsis*, sb.: coined fr. Gk.: name of a genus of plants (Nat. Order Ampelideae or Vine-worts), esp. of the delicate and beautiful wall-creeper, Ampelopsis Veitchii, a native of Japan.

1835 AMPELOPSIS (Michaux). A genus of North American climbing and shrubby plants, consisting of four species...The A. quinquefolia is a useful plant for hiding naked buildings, or forming shady bowers...It grows rapidly and needs no nailing up against walls, it being supported by its own tendrils: C. F. PARTINGTON, Brit. Cycl. (Nat. Hist.).

ampère, sb.: Fr.: Electr. Sci.: the unit of current, viz. that which one volt can send through one ohm.

1882 The other unit I should suggest...is that of power. The power conveyed by a current of an ampère through the difference of potential of a volt is the unit consistent with the practical system: DR. C. W. SIEMENS, in Nature, Vol. XXVI. p. 391. 1883 it works with 400 volts and uses 30 to 40 ampères of current: Daily News, Sept. 29, p. 71.

**amphibia*, -ii (pl.), amphibium, -on (sing.), sb.: Lat.

I. i. a creature that lives partly on land and partly in water. Also metaph. of fishermen, or watermen.

1607 there are Beares which are called Amphibia, because they live both on the land and in the sea: TOPSELL, Four-f. Beasts, p. 36. 1611 For which reason the Greekes call him [the crocodile] ἀμφίβιον: T. CORYAT, Cruities, Vol. I. p. 182 (1776). 1667 Whales or seals, which, being amphibii, have both a willingness and a place convenient to suckle their whelps: JOHN TRAPP, Com.

Old Test., Vol. III. p. 564/2 (1868). — They are ἀμφίβιοι, as crocodiles, chameleons: ib., Vol. IV. p. 463/1. 1665 a strange Diver, by his continual converse in Water, so degenerated from himself, That he was grown more like an Amphibium, then a man: Phil. Trans., Vol. I. No. 6, p. 114. 1665 sixty years is usually the age of this detested Amphibium [crocodile]: SIR TH. HERBERT, Trav., p. 364 (1677). — These also are amphibii [amphibious animals (Ed. 1677)], equally using land and water: ib., p. 13 (1665). — these Amphibii [crocodiles] are observed to be one of the greatest wonders we meet with: ib., p. 363 (1677). 1681 How Tortoise like, but not so slow, | These rational Amphibii go? A. MARVELL, Misc., p. 103. 1689 Upon the banks and shores, ye see several Amphibia, as crabs, seals, beavers: R. L'ESTRANGE, Tr. Erasmus sel. Colloqu., p. 75.

I. 2. metaph. a being whose nature, state, or position, is doubtful.

1645 Ask these amphibia what names they would have. What, are you papists? JOHN WHALY, Serm. at Paul's Cross, June 18, p. 33. 1681 And languished with doubtful Breath, | Th' Amphibium of Life and Death: A. MARVELL, Misc., p. 21.

I. 3. a being having a twofold existence. Anglicised as amphibian.

1642 Thus is man that great and true Amphibium, whose nature is disposed to live, not only like other Creatures in divers Elements, but in divided and distinguished Worlds: SIR TH. BROWN, Relig. Med., § xxxiv. Wks., Vol. II. p. 373 (1852). 1667 Amphibians, that will conform to the world, and yet seem to be for the Lord: JOHN TRAPP, Com. Old Test., Vol. IV. p. 84/2 (1868).

II. a technical term in zoology, now applied to the fourth great division of Vertebrata, which in their early stage breathe by gills, as frogs, newts. Rare in sing.

1797 AMPHIBIA, in zoology, the name of Linnaeus's third class of animals; including all those which live partly in water and partly on land. This class he subdivides into four orders, viz. The amphibia repiles; the amphibia serpentes; the amphibia nantes; and the amphibia meantes: Encyc. Brit.

[Late Lat. amphibium, fr. Gk. ἀμφίβιον, neut. of ἀμφίβιος, = 'double-lived'.]

amphibole, sb.: Eng. fr. Fr. amphibole (adj., = 'ambiguous'): an ambiguity, amphiboly, amphibology.

1606 There is not only an Homonymie in the word [Gallos] signifying the French Nation, and the crowing cocks, but an Amphibole also in the sentence: HOLLAND, Tr. Suet., Annot. on Nero Claud. Caesar.

amphibologia, sb.: Late Lat.: Anglicised as 'amphibology'. Chaucer probably took 'amphibologie' from Fr.

I. Gen. ambiguous speech.

1552 It is an amphibologia, and therefore Erasmus turneth it into Latin with such words: LATIMER, Serm. Lord's Prayer, VII. II. 112. [N. E. D.] 1607 The first kind of Equivocation by mental reservation, cannot properly be called Equivocation but AMPHIBOLOGIA, ambiguity of speech: R. PARSONS, Treat. Mitig., ch. viii. p. 317.

2. Rhet. and Log. the figure of ambiguity arising from the equivocal construction of a sentence consisting of unequivocal words.

1589 such ambiguous termes they call Amphibologia: PUTTENHAM, Eng. Poes., III. xxii. p. 267 (1869).

amphiboly (= 1 = 2), sb.: Eng. fr. Fr.

I. Gen. ambiguity, equivocation, amphibology.

1610 What a crafty Amphibolie or Æquivocation: HOLLAND, Camden's Brit., I. 307. [N. E. D.] 1632 Come, leave your Schemes, And fine Amphibolies, Parson: B. JONSON, Magn. Lady, II. 5, p. 25 (1640). 1654 he will create an Amphiboly, a double meaning where there is none: R. WHITLOCK, Zootomia, p. 254.

2. Rhet. and Log. the figure of ambiguity arising from the equivocal construction of a sentence consisting of unequivocal words: distinguished from equivocation, or the use of equivocal terms.

1588 Amphiboly, when the sentence may be turned both the wayes, so that a man shall be uncertayne what waye to take: FRANCES, Lawier's Log., I. IV. 276. [N. E. D.]

amphibrachys, -chus, sb.: Lat. fr. Gk. ἀμφίβραχυς: lit. 'short on both sides', name of a metrical foot consisting of a long syllable with a short syllable before and after it. Anglicised as amphibrach, 18 c. 19 c.

1586 Amphibrachus, of a short, a long, and a short, as ~ ~ ~ reioyced: W. WEBBE, Discourse of Eng. Poet., in Haslewood's Eng. Poets & Poety, Vol. II. p. 67 (1815). 1589 make...the last word (Sēpūchēr) the foote (amphibrachus): PUTTENHAM, Eng. Poes., II. xiii [xv], p. 139 (1869). — the foote of (Amphibrachus): ib., xv [xvi], p. 141. 1784 The arrangement of the words as they now stand has a very bad effect on the ear, 'endeavour preserving this temper among them': from four successive amphibrachs, with the accent four times repeated on the middle syllable of three in each foot, which give the sentence the air of a comic cantering verse: SHERIDAN, Note to Swift's Examiner, No. 24. [L.] 1886 Hence the apparent Amphictyon must be divided as follows: MAYOR, Eng. Metre, ch. vi. p. 95. — Whether amphibrachys, i.e. iamb followed by an unaccented syllable, could be allowed in any place: ib., ch. v. p. 74.

*Amphictyons: Gk.: representatives of confederated states of Ancient Greece forming a council. The principal Amphictyony was an association of the twelve chief states for the protection of the Delphic oracle, the council of which met at Delphi and Thermopylae.

1579 the council of the Amphictyons (that is, the general council of all the states of GREECE): NORTH, Tr. Plutarch, p. 126 (1612). 1586 the sacred council of the Amphictyons: T. B., Tr. La Primaud. Fr. Acad., p. 677. 1601 a decree from the Amphictyons (who are the lords of the publicke council of state in Greece): HOLLAND, Tr. Plin. N. H., Bk. 35, ch. 9, Vol. II. p. 533. bef. 1603 the assembly of the Estates of GREECE, which they call the Council of the Amphictyons: NORTH (Lives of Epamin., &c., added to) Plut., p. 1129 (1612). 1734 of which games the Amphictyons were judges and agonothetæ: Tr. Rollin's Anc. Hist., IV. x. p. 405. 1788 the Amphictyons, to reward so liberal an artist, decreed that he should be entertained at the public charge: Gent. Mag., LVIII. i. 119/1. 1820 the total destruction of this city by the Amphictyons: T. S. HUGHES, Trav. in Sicily, Vol. I. ch. xii. p. 368. 1885 like the Amphictyonic Council, he has a voice only, without a force of any kind to carry his orders into effect: J. A. FROUDE, Oceana, ch. iv. p. 59 (1886). 1885 What has become of the "European Areopagus," or "Amphictyonic Council"? Daily News, Nov. 16, p. 5/1.

amphigouri, sô.: Mod. Fr.: a nonsensical string of inconsequent words or sentences, a rigmarole.

1809 The work must... be considered as a kind of overgrown amphigouri, a heterogeneous combination of events: Q. Rev., i. 50. [N. E. D.]

amphisbaena, sô.: Lat. fr. Gk.: Gk. Mythol.: a serpent with a head at both ends; see quotations.

1572 There are seen also in Armes, the signes of Serpentes, as the Dragon, Coluber, Basiliske, of somme called the Cockatrice, Amphibene, Stellion: BOSSEWELL, Armorie, fol. 21 r°. 1580 you have thrust into my hands the Serpent Amphisbena, which hauing at ech ende a sting, hurteth both wayes: J. LVLV, Enphues & his Engl., p. 287 (1868). 1601 The Amphisbaena hath two heads...one at the taile: HOLLAND, Tr. Plin. N. H., Bk. 8, ch. 23, Vol. I. p. 208. — one kind of serpent or venomous worme, which they call Amphisbæna [for that it seemeth to have an head at both ends]: ib., Bk. 20, ch. 21, Vol. II. p. 70. 1603 Th' Amphisbæna her double banefull sting: J. SYLVESTER, Tr. Du Bartas, p. 157 (1608). 1609 Egypt breedeth also an infinit number of serpents, to wit... the Amphisbæna, the Scytale, &c.: HOLLAND, Tr. Marc., Bk. 22, ch. 15, p. 213. 1646 the Amphisbæna... is a small kind of Serpent which moveth forward and backward, hath two Heads, or one at either extrem: SIR TH. BROWN, Pseud. Ep., Bk. III. ch. xv. p. 111 (1686). 1651 Plato's Amphisbæna: Reliq. Wolton, p. 260 (1654). 1662 Snakes and Serpents, which are here very dangerous, and among the rest those, which from a Greek word are called Amphisbæna: J. DAVIES, Tr. Mandelst., Bk. I. p. 27 (1669). 1667 Scorpion, and Asp, and Amphisbæna dire: MILTON, P. L., x. 518. bef. 1691 It was now with us much like as it is said of the amphisbæna, that hath an head at either end of which neither can nor will move without the consent of both: J. FLAVEL, Wks., Vol. VI. p. 320 (1799).

[From Gk. ἀμφισβᾶνα, fr. ἀμφίς, = 'both ways', and stem of βαίνειν, = 'to go'; but it is said to be foreign, the Gk. form being due to popular etymology.]

amphiscii, sô.: Lat. fr. Gk.: inhabitants of the Torrid Zone, where shadows incline towards the north at one time of the year, the south at another.

1665 The Inhabitants within this Zone (the torrid we are now in) are called Amphiscii, in respect they cast their shadows both ways: SIR TH. HERBERT, Trav., p. 5 (1677). 1738 CHAMBERS, Cycl.

[From Gk. ἀμφίσκιοι, fr. ἀμφί, prep., = 'on both sides', and σκιά, = 'shadow'.]

*amphitheatre, -trum, sô.: Eng. fr. Fr., or Lat.: a double theatre, a circular or oval building with tiers of seats round a central arena; hence, an arena (metaph.), a surrounding scene, a natural scene formed by a level surrounded by rising slopes. The pronunciation is unsettled, but to lay stress on the second a is vulgar. Perhaps 1-1-1-1 is the most correct accentuation, but the vowels of the third and fourth syllables often coalesce into the sound of ear with a primary stress.

1540 strange and furious beastes... which were kepte onely to thintent that at certayne tymes in the Amphitheatre... the people mought take plesure in beholdinge them: ELYOT, Im. Governance, p. 49 v°. 1549 Vespasianus... beganne the Amphitheater, now called Coliseo: W. THOMAS, Hist. of Italye, fol. 112 v°. — the Amphitheatrum, now called Coliseo: ib., fol. 26 v°. 1590 the Amphitheatre was set on fire: L. LLOYD, Consent of Time, p. 568. 1600 Vespasian his Amphitheatre at Rome: JOHN PORV, Tr. Leo's Hist. Afr., p. 68. 1600 A great part of Statilius his Amphitheatre, is yet to bee seene neere the wals: HOLLAND, Tr. Livy (Summ. Mar.), IV. xx., p. 1380. 1621 amphitheatrems of curious marble: R. BURTON, Anat. Mel., To Reader, p. 82 (1827). bef. 1719 I saw at Verona the famous Amphitheatre: ADDISON, Wks., Vol. II. p. 19 (1730). 1861 Look at the amphitheatre yonder. You do not suppose those gladiators who fought and perished, of necessity hated each other: THACKERAY, Roundabout Papers, p. 124 (1873).

[From Fr. amphithéâtre, fr. Lat. amphitheatrum (used in 16 c. 17 c.), fr. Gk. ἀμφιθέατρον, = 'on-both-sides a theatre', fr. stem of θέσθαι, = 'to behold'.]

Amphitritē: Gk. Mythol.: the goddess of the Ocean, wife of Poseidōn (Neptune), daughter of Oceanus; by metonymy, the sea. Sometimes Anglicised so as to rhyme with 'white'.

1603 The King of Windes calls home his churlish train, | And Amphitritē smooths her front again: J. SYLVESTER, Tr. Du Bartas, Schism, p. 108 (1608). 1630 Thine Amphitritean Muse grows more ardent, | And Phæbus tripos, stoopes to Neptunes trident: JOHN TAYLOR, Wks., sig. A 5 v°/1. 1637 And I must haste ere morning hour | To wait in Amphitrite's bower: MILTON, Comus, 921. 1662 The British Amphitrite, smooth and clear, | In richer azure never did appear: DRYDEN, Astr. Red., 246.

*Amphitryon: Gk. Mythol.: husband of Alcmena. Zeus (Jupiter), in Amphitryon's absence, assumed his form and visited Alcmena, so that Hēraklēs (Hercules) was the son of Alcmena by Zeus. Yet Herakles was called Amphitryonides after his putative father, which patronymic appears as Amphitryonide, J. SYLVESTER, Tr. Du Bartas, Tropheis, p. 25 (1608). The Amphitryon in Molière's comedy of that name gives a great feast, and in III. v. occurs "Le véritable Amphitryon est l'Amphitryon où l'on dîne"; hence the name stands for a host, the giver of a dinner.

1. a two-handled vessel of Ancient Greece and Italy.

1601 an earthen amphor [of wine]: HOLLAND, Tr. Plin. N. H., Bk. 35, ch. 12, Vol. II. p. 553. 1748 This quadrimum was excellent ale of his own brewing, of which he told us he had always an amphora four years old for the use of himself and friends: SMOLLETT, Rad. Rand., ch. x. Wks., Vol. I. p. 51 (1817). 1836 earthen jars, not unlike the amphoræ of the ancients still remaining to us: J. F. DAVIS, Chinese, Vol. I. ch. viii. p. 330. 1878 The young woman's milk can, a great amphora of hammered brass: R. L. STEVENSON, Inland Voyage, p. 49. 1886 [The] space is known to have contained... a huge wine cellar filled with thousands of amphoræ: RODOLFO LANCIANI, in Athenæum, Mar. 13, p. 365/2.

2. an ancient liquid (and dry) measure of abt. 7½ imperial gals. capacity with the Greeks, 5½ with the Romans; Anglicised as amphore.

anacardium, anacard(us), sb.: Low Lat., and Eng. fr. Lat. or Fr.: the cashew nut; see acajou, cashew.

1526 y<sup>e</sup> iuce of anacardes: Grete Herball, ch. xxiii. 1598 The fruit called Anacardi, is in manye places of India, as in Cananor: Tr. J. Van Linschoten's Voyages, Bk. I. Vol. II. p. 127 (1885). 1611 Anacarde, Th' East-Indian fruit called Anacardium, or Beane of Malaca: COTGR. bef. 1617 Anacardium or beane of Malaca: MINSHEU, Guide into Tongues. 1662 Anacardium...is very common here: J. DAVIES, Tr. Mandelslo, Bk. II. p. 122 (1669).

[Coined fr. Gk.  $\alpha\nu\alpha$ , prep., = 'according to', and  $\kappa\alpha\rho\delta\iota\alpha$ , = 'heart', because of the shape of the fruit.]

anacephalaeōsis, sb.: Gk.  $\alpha\nu\alpha\kappa\epsilon\phi\alpha\lambda\alpha\iota\omega\sigma\iota\varsigma$ : recapitulation, summary of principal heads of a subject.

1650 A through-description...being indeed an Anacepheliosis of the whole book: BULWER, Anthropomet., Pref. [N.E.D.] 1666 As hath been said

anacoluthia, anacoluthon, sb.: Lat. fr. Gk. ἀνακολουθία, ἀνακόλουθον: absence of (grammatical) sequence, mixed or incoherent construction of a sentence. Also anacoluthon, pl. anacolutha, a sentence of which the construction is mixed or incoherent.

1706 Anacolython, a Rhetorical Figure, when a word that is to answer another is not express'd: PHILLIPS, World of Words. 1753 ANACOLUTHON, Ανακολουθον, amongst ancient grammarians, denotes an incoherence, or a construction which does not hang together: CHAMBERS, Cycl., Suppl. 1859 There are two kinds of Anacoluthon: (a) grammatical, (b) rhetorical. The grammatical Anacoluthon...for the most part, caused by attraction: EDWARDS & TAYLOR, Tr. Kühner's Grammar, § 347, 5.

anaconda ( = = L = ), sb.: a name of the large Python (snake) of Ceylon, subsequently assigned to a large boa of S. America, and now to any very large snake.

[1693 Anacandaia: J. RAY, Synops. Meth., p. 332.] 1768 The Ceylonese seemed to know the creature [a monstrous species of Serpent] well; they call it Anacanda: Scots Mag., Append., 673. [Yule] 1797 ANACONDO, in natural history, is a name given in the isle of Ceylon to a very large and terrible rattlesnake, which often devours the unfortunate traveller alive: Encyc. Brit. 1836 The name of Anaconda, like that of Boa Constrictor, has been popularly applied to all the larger and more powerful snakes: Penny Cycl., Vol. v. p. 271. 1883 you cannot eat all those doughnuts, unless you have the appetite of an anaconda: B. W. HOWARD, One Summer, ch. x. p. 113.

Anacreontic, adj.: Eng. fr. Lat.: in the metre or style of the Gk. poet Anacreon (Ἀνακρέων), who sang of love and conviviality in short verses of easy rhythm. Also sb. for an Anacreontic poem.

1611 Certaine Anacreonticke verses præambulatory to the most ambulatorie Odecombian Traueller: N. T., in Coryat's Crambe, sig. a 4<sup>ro</sup>. bef. 1656 Anacreontiques; or some copies of verses translated paraphrastically out of Anacreon: COWLEY, Title. 1706 Anacreontick Verse: PHILLIPS, World of Words.

anacrūsīs, sb.: Late Lat. fr. Gk. ἀνάκρουσις, = 'a striking up' (of a tune): one syllable, or more, at the beginning of a verse pronounced before the regular rhythm; the placing or uttering of one extra-rhythmic syllable or more at the beginning of a verse. An unaccented part of a foot preceding a metrical ictus has sometimes been called anacrusis.

1830 Now the time or times which precede the arsis are evidently parts of a series infinite from its beginning. Those times we call anacrusis; because they are, as it were, a kind of introduction or prelude to the numbers which the ictus afterwards begins: J. SEAGER, Tr. Hermann's Metres, Bk. I. ch. ii. p. 5. — iambic verses also for the most part proceed by dipodia, the anacrusis being every where doubtful: ib., ch. xii. p. 30. 1833 The lambus, which in technical language is said to consist of anacrusis and arsis: Edin. Rev., Vol. 56, p. 372. 1886 Dr. Abbott gives the historical explanation of anacrusis in English Lessons: MAYOR, Eng. Metre, vii. 105. 1887 That an anacrusis may begin only one of two corresponding strophic verses is not established by the instances collected: Athenæum, Apr. 30, p. 570/3.

anaemia, sb.: Late Lat. coined fr. Gk. ἀναιμος, = 'bloodless': an unhealthy condition, characterised by pallor and weakness, arising from deficiency of blood or of the red corpuscles in the blood. Described by Lieutand, 1761.

1807 Concise Observations on Anæmia, a Disease which attacked all the Workmen of a Gallery in a Coal Mine: Med. & Phys. Journ., Vol. xvii. p. 472. 1822 A disease, under the title of Anæmia, has been described by Becker: Med. Chir. Soc. Edin., p. 202 (1824). 1829 Fall into a state of anæmia...The second is denominated anæmia, or deficiency of the same fluid: Edin. Med. & Surg. Journ., Vol. xxxii. p. 196.

*anaesthesia, sb.: Gk.: absence of sensation, insensibility.

1721 Anæsthesia, a Defect of Sensation, as in Paralytic and blasted Persons: BAILEY. 1753 CHAMBERS, Cycl., Suppl. 1797 ANÆSTHESIA, signifies a privation of the senses: Encyc. Brit. 1814 Dr. Yelloly has annexed a collection of similar instances of Anæsthesia [sic] found in authors: Med. & Phys. Journ., Vol. xxx. p. 167. 1847—9 the anæsthesia may be succeeded by the most acute sensibility: TODD, Cyc. Anat. and Phys., Vol. iv. p. 691/2.

[Gk. ἀναίσθησία, = 'stupidity', 'stupor', 'lack of sensation', fr. ἀν-, = 'un-', and αἴσθησις, = 'feeling', 'sensation'.]

1848 [N. E. D.] 1885 The anaesthesia continues perfectly regular and complete under the most severe operations: Athenæum, July 11, p. 541.

agnōrīsis, sb.: Gk. ἀγνώρισις, = 'recognition': in the drama, a dénouement brought about by the recognition of some person or persons whose true name and character have been previously concealed (from other persons of the drama).

bef. 1800 Webster cites BLAIR. 1887 The scene that follows between Creon, Œdipus, and Jocasta was, on the whole, well rendered. Indeed, this and the final examination of the herdsmen, when the ἀγνώρισις becomes complete, were the most effective parts of the play: Athenæum, Nov. 26, p. 721/3.

1. a word, phrase, or name formed by transposing the letters of a name, word, or phrase; also such transposition of letters.

1589 that other which the Greekes call Anagramma, and we the Poësie transposed: PUTTENHAM, Eng. Poes., II. xi. p. 115 (1869). — Of the Anagram, or poësie transposed: ib., p. 121. 1596 Vnder the inuersed denomination or anagram of this Word: NASH, Have with You, Wks., III. 123 (Grosart). 1603 honoring Still the same In-soul'd an Imprese with her Anagramm: J. SYLVESTER, Tr. Du Bartas, p. 80 (1608). 1609 who will...Make anagrammes of our names? B. JONSON, Sil. Wom., iv. 3, Wks., p. 572 (1616). 1619 Wherunto I will add this surname Anagram. Yours whole J. Howell: HOWELL, Lett., I. xii. p. 24 (1645). 1630 For in an Anagram Isharrist is, | By letters transposition traytor kis: JOHN TAYLOR, Wks., sig. C 5<sup>ro</sup>/1. 1659 Laban and Nabal are one the anagram of the other: N. HADY, on 1st Ep. John, Nichol's Ed., p. 263/1 (1865). 1684 Thy genius calls thee not to purchase fame | In keen Iambics, but mild Anagram: DRYDEN, Mac Flecknoe, 204. 1712 Anagrams and Acrosticks: Spectator, No. 466, Aug. 25, p. 666/2 (Morley).

2. metaph. transposition, re-arrangement. Obs.

bef. 1658 Randleers dangling about a fur'd Alderman, have an Anagram Resemblance: J. CLEVELAND, Wks., p. 73 (1687). — Heaven descends into the Bowels of the Earth, and, to make up the Anagram, the Graves open and the Dust ariseth: ib., p. 128. 1711 The anagram of a man: Spectator, No. 60, May 9, Vol. I. p. 225 (1826).

[From Fr. anagramme, fr. Mod. Lat. anagramma, as if fr. Gk. ἀναγράφειν, = 'to rewrite'. In post-Classical Gk. ἀναγραμμάτιζεν, = 'to transpose the letters (of a word or name)', and the verbal sb. ἀναγραμματος occur.]

Anak (Sons of), Anakim (pl.): Heb.: a race distinguished for their great stature, whom the Israelites found in Hebron; see Numb., xiii. 33; Anakims, Deut., ii. 11, Josh., xiv. 15; used representatively.

1620 they affray Gods people...with the greatness of those difficulties, as it were with so many Gyants and sonnes of Anak, which they haue spied and scene herein: R. CRANKHOP, Predestination, p. 4. 1621 Ajax, Caligula, and the rest of those great Zanzummins, or giganticall Anakims, heave, vast, barbarous lubbers: R. BURTON, Anat. Mel., Pt. 2, Sec. 3, Mem. 2, Vol. II. p. 10 (1827). 1647 our State-Anakims baff'd and beaten out of breath: Merc. Melancholicus, No. 11, p. 63. bef. 1670 Now, as his Lordship conceived, his Strength lay among the Anakims: J. HACKET, Abp. Williams, Pt. I. 174, p. 168 (1693). — And all these Pillars, which held up our Substance, were battered by the Sons of Anak, and ready to fall: ib., Pt. II. 193, p. 207. 1687 He seemed a son of Anak for his height: DRYDEN, Hind & Panth., III. 1142. 1713 If you saw us all together, you would take us for the sons of Anak: ADDISON, Guardian, No. 108, Wks., Vol. IV. p. 203 (1856). 1748 bounced against me with such force, that I thought he was the supposed son of Anak: SMOLLETT, Rod. Rand., ch. xi. Wks., Vol. I. p. 55 (1817). 1781 another of those comely sons of Anak, the breed of which your brother and Lady Hertford have piously restored for the comfort of the daughters of Sion: HOR. WALPOLE, Letters, Vol. VIII. p. 48 (1858). 1813 Murray, the avast of publishers, the Anac of stationers, has a design upon you in the paper line: BYRON, in Moore's Life, p. 312 (1875).

analecta, analects ( = = L = ), sb. pl.: Lat., and Eng. fr. Lat.: collected extracts from literary works. The English analects = 'pickings from the table', 'scraps of food', is a little earlier (1623 Cockeram).

analepsia, analencia, sb.: Late Lat. coined on analogy of Gk. ἐπιληψία, = 'epilepsy', with prep. ἀνα-, = 'up, back', for ἐπι-, = 'upon': epilepsy.

1389 That manere euyl that hyghte Analempsia...comyth of replycyon of the stomak and moost of indygestyon and of bolkynge: TREvisa, Tr. Barth. De P. R., VII. x. 229 (1495). 1542 immoderate slepe...is euyl for the palsy...for the fallynge syckenes called Epilencia, Analencia: BOORDE, Dyetary, p. 244 (1870).

analogicē, adv.: Late Lat.: analogically, according to proportion or likeness of relations.

1681—1703 take this new creature with this indwelling of the Holy Ghost in it...and it makes, analogice, a greater change in kind than if a beast were made a man: TH. GOODWIN, Wks., in Nichol's Ser. Stand. Divines, Vol. VI. p. 409 (1863).

analogon, sb.: Gk.: analogue, that which corresponds.

1810 It has neither coordinate nor analogon: COLERIDGE, Friend, II. ii. 340 (1867). [N. E. D.] 1869 This was the nearest analogon to such a conception as the natives could find: FARRAR, Fam. Speech, iv. 116 (1873). [N. E. D.]

[Neut. of Gk. adj. ἀνάλογος, = 'proportionate', 'conformable', fr. ἀνά, = 'according to', λόγος = 'ratio'.]

\*analysis ( $\alpha \nu \lambda \upsilon \sigma \iota \varsigma$ , sb.: Eng. fr. Gk. or Late Lat. (fr. Gk.): resolution into simple elements or into several contents; lit. 'unloosing'.

I. 1. the act or process of resolving or separating, opposed to synthesis. Applied to complex objects both of intellectual and of sensual observation.

1580 which definition...no whit answereth with the  $\alpha \nu \lambda \upsilon \sigma \iota \varsigma$  and interpretation of the word: E. KIRKE, in Spens. Shep. Cal., Arg., Wks., p. 444/1 (1869). 1589 the beggerly straites of a hungry Analysis: T. NASHE, in R. Greene's Menaphon, p. 12 (1880). 1627 you cannot make any true Analysis and Indication of the Proceedings of Nature: BACON, Nat. Hist., Cent. i. § 98. 1867 The analysis of every possible hypothesis proves, not simply that no hypothesis is sufficient, but that no hypothesis is even thinkable: H. SPENCER, First Princ., Vol. i. p. 46 (2nd Ed.). 1877 the complete analysis of character is usually made subordinate to the great central passions of the play: Times, June 18, p. 5/6. [St.]

I. 1 a. Math. resolution of a proposition into simpler propositions already known. Modern Math. the treatment of geometry and sciences dependent thereon by means of a calculus of general symbols of which algebra is the simplest.

1656 Analysis is continual reasoning from the definitions of the terms of a proposition we suppose true...and so on, till we come to some things known: HOBBS, Elem. Philos., 309 (1839). [N.E.D.] 1753 Simple ANALYSIS is that employed in solving problems reducible to simple equations: CHAMBERS, Cycl., Suppl., s. v. — The Scholiast on Euclid defines Analysis, the sumption of a thing sought by the consequent, as if it were already known, in order to find out the truth: ib.

I. 2. Log. and Philos. the resolution of knowledge of particulars into general principles, the tracing of effects as far back as possible through the series of causation, the Inductive method.

1654 Logick must lend him Analysis to make usefull division of this divine Bread: R. WHITLOCK, Zootomia, p. 165. 1671 That therefore I might comply with the Laws of an Analysis, as far as I could, I have so often woven over and over the Webb of this Inquiry, and searched through every part thereof: H. O., Tr. N. Steno's Prodrom. on Solids in Solids, p. 11. bef. 1680 We cannot know any thing of nature, but by an analysis of its true initial causes: GLANVILLE. [J.] 1753 ANALYSIS, in logic, is particularly used for the reduction of an imperfect syllogism to a perfect one: CHAMBERS, Cycl., Suppl.

I. 2 a. Chem. the resolution of a chemical compound into its constituents or elements.

1765 the experiments necessary to exhibit a complete analysis: SMOLLETT, France & Italy, xl. Wks., Vol. v. p. 556 (1817).

I. 2 b. Optics. the resolution of light into the several prismatic colors.

I. 2 c. Gram. the classification of the several parts of a sentence, according to a grammatical scheme.

I. 2 d. Lit. the exhibition of the component parts of a literary work in a simple form.

II. the result of the discrimination of the elements, constituents, or heads of anything, a scheme, abridgment, synopsis, tabular statement of contents or results.

1668 A Scheme or Analysis of all the Genus's or more common heads of things belonging to this design: WILKINS, Real Char., II. i. § 1, 22. [N.E.D.] 1820 Dr. Clarke, to whose kindness I am indebted for the following scientific analysis [of a piece of rock], which seems at variance with the opinions of the Sicilian philosophers: T. S. HUGHES, Trav. in Sicily, Vol. i. ch. iv. p. 110. 1863 my somewhat arbitrary analysis of the honest sailor's letter: C. READE, Hard Cash, Vol. i. p. 15.

anamnēsis, sb.: Gk.  $\alpha \nu \alpha \mu \nu \eta \sigma \iota \varsigma$ : remembrance, reminiscence; Rhet., the figure of reminiscence; Med., information imparted by a patient; Platonic, reminiscence of ideas (q. v.) as objects of cognition in a prior state of existence, which constitutes the intelligence of the human soul (Plato, Phaedo, 72 E—77 A).

1657 Anamnesis is a figure whereby the speaker calling to mind matters past, whether of sorrow, joy, &c. doth make recital of them: J. SMITH, Myst. Rhet., 249. [N.E.D.] 1696 Anamnesis, (Gr.) a Rhetorical Figure, whereby we call to mind matters past: PHILLIPS, World of Words.

anamorphōsis, pl. anamorphōsēs, sb.: Late Gk.  $\alpha \nu \alpha \mu \rho \phi \omega \sigma \iota \varsigma$ , = 'a forming anew': a distorted projection of a figure which from a particular point of view appears to be properly proportioned.

1738 ANAMORPHOSIS, in perspective and painting, a monstrous projection; or a representation of some image, either on a plane or curve surface, deformed; which at a certain distance shall appear regular, and in proportion: CHAMBERS, Cycl. 1797 Encyc. Brit.

anánas, anána, sb.: Port.: the pine-apple, Ananassa sativa; according to Evelyn's Diary, 1661, July 19, first seen in England 1657; first cultivated successfully in England at Richmond in Sir M. Decker's garden, 1712. Common in India in 16 c. whither Portuguese brought it from the W. Indies. Raleigh calls the fruit pina (q. v.).

1598 Ananas by the Canarijns called Ananasa, by the Brasilians Nana and by others in Hispaniola Taiama: by the Spaniards in Brasilia Pinas, because of a certain resemblance which the fruits hath with the Pine apple (pinecone): Tr. J. Van Linschoten's Voyages, Bk. i. ch. 49, p. 90/2. — The fruits of this country are many whereof Ananas is the best, the leaves whereof are like the leaves of Iris or Aloes...the fruit is long like Cucumbers or distaves: ib., Bk. II. p. 251/2. — The common way to dresse the [common] Ananasses, is to cut them in [broad] round [cakes or] slices: ib., Vol. II. p. 20 (1885). 1600 a fruit of great excellencie which they call Ananas: R. HAKLUYT, Voyages, Vol. III. p. 319. 1634 Pome-citrons, Ananas, Plantaines, Cowcubers; SIR TH. HERBERT, Trav., p. 24. — The Ananas for goodnesse and shape may craue attention, which though it be not inferior to the Giacke, for bulke and roundnesse, yet is the plant she comes of, no way equal, this grows not from Tree nor sowing, but of a root agreeable to our Arthi-choake, they appeare aboue ground at maturity, and affect not aboue two foot height: ib., p. 183. 1662 Ananas, Bannanas, Cocos, Jacques, Mangas, Oranges, Lemmons: J. DAVIES, Tr. Mandelslo, Bk. II. p. 92 (1669). 1691 From the Root...arise Leaves on every side, after the manner of Leeks or Ananas, whence the name of Wild Pine or Aloes, being folded or enclosed one within another: J. RAY, Creation, Pt. II. p. 215 (1705). 1752 very ripe muscat grapes raised in my anana house, which is now stocked with African ananas: LORD CHESTERFIELD, Lett., Bk. II. No. lxxi. Misc. Wks., Vol. II. p. 383 (1777). 1883 A few pineapples are found at Bôldô, between the station and the native town, but the fruit appears to be very rare elsewhere in the vicinity, and we are evidently here on the confines of the district over which "Ananassa sativa" has spread with such wonderful vigour and rapidity: Daily Telegraph, Sept. 11, p. 5/8.

[From Braz. nana or nanas. The form anána is either Sp., or comes from taking the -s to be the pl. sign.]

Ananizapta, sb.: a mystic word found inscribed on gems and amulets, said to be a prophylactic for epilepsy and the plague. See quotations.

1584 Ananizapta smiteth death, whiles harme intendeth he, [This word Ananizapta say, and death shall captiue be, | Ananizapta ô of God, have mercie now on me: R. SCOTT, Disc. Witch., Bk. XII. ch. xiv. p. 243. 1753 ANANIZAPTA, or ANANISAPTA, a magical word frequently found inscribed on coins and other amulets, supposed to have a virtue of preserving the wearer from the plague: CHAMBERS, Cycl., Suppl. 1797 Encyc. Brit. 1873 In the Devonshire Cabinet is a cameo converted into an amulet, by the addition of "Ananizapta": C. W. KING, Early Christ. Numism., p. 213.

[From Heb. Anani (see I Chron., iii. 24), a name of the Messiah (according to ancient Jewish tradition); and Heb. Shophthah or Shaphtah, 2nd sing. imper., = 'judge', 'vindicate', 'help'. The Aramaic Zapta, = 'matting', 'bed', quasi 'bed of alleviation', gives a less appropriate meaning. Another view derives the word from Arab. h'nān, = 'a charm' (e.g. dust from a martyr's tomb), and sephthā, = 'the stone in a ring'.]

\*anankē, sb.: Gk.  $\alpha \nu \alpha \kappa \eta$ : necessity. Also personified, the ultimate Fate to which even the gods of Greek Mythology were subject.

1885 The theme is the predestined fate, the anankē of human existence: Spectator, May 30, p. 705/2.

anapaestus, anapaest ( $\alpha \nu \alpha \pi \alpha \epsilon \sigma \tau \upsilon \varsigma$ , sb.: Lat., and Eng. fr. Lat.: a metrical foot; see first quotation. It is a 'reversed' dactyl.

1586 The mixt [foot of 3. syllables] is of 6. diuers sortes...2. Anapaestus, of two shorte, and one long, as  $\cup \cup \text{—}$  tauelers: W. WEBBE, Discourse of Eng. Poet., in Haslewood's Eng. Poets & Poesy, Vol. II. p. 67 (1815). 1589 your anapaestus of two short and a long...as mānifōld: PUTTENHAM, Eng. Poet., II. xiii. p. 133 (1869). 1609 advanced gently forward, as if they footed the measures of the metrical foot Anapaestus: HOLLAND, Tr. Marc., Lib. 24, ch. x. p. 256. 1830 Dactyls, even following one another, are very frequently substituted for anapaests: Tr. Hermann's Metres, Bk. II. ch. xxxi. p. 82. 1886 We give to certain accentual arrangements the names of dactyl, anapaest, iamb, &c.: Athenaeum, Dec. 18, p. 821/1.

[Lat. anapaestus, fr. Gk.  $\alpha \nu \alpha \pi \alpha \epsilon \sigma \tau \upsilon \varsigma$ , = 'struck back', 'reversed', fr.  $\alpha \nu \alpha$ , prep., = 'back', and  $\pi \alpha \epsilon \upsilon \omega$ , = 'to strike'.]

anaphora, sb.: Lat.: Rhet.: repetition of a word or words in several consecutive clauses. Also rarely, a composition in which such repetition occurs. Also a technical term in the Liturgy of the Greek Church, viz. for that part of the Eucharistic ceremony at which the elements are consecrated, and for the book of the Eucharistic Liturgy.

1589 Anaphora, or the Figure of Report: PUTTENHAM, Eng. Poet., III. xix. p. 208 (1869). 1822 What is a Reuert but her Antistrophe? her reports, but sweete Anaphora? PEACHAM, Comp. Gent., ch. xi. p. 103. 1753 ANAPHORA is also a title given to those little Syriac liturgies, wherein are contained the prayers after the Osculum Pacis: CHAMBERS, Cycl., Suppl. 1883 An anaphora translated into Latin by Renaudot is ascribed to [Jacob Baradaeus]: SCHAFF HERZOG, Encyc. Relig. Knowl., Vol. II. p. 1135/2.

anāreta, anaereta, sb.: Late Lat. fr. Gk.  $\alpha \nu \alpha \rho \eta \tau \eta \varsigma$ , 'destroyer': Astrol.: the planet which destroys life.

1603 the Sunne in that natiuitie cannot be Aphata vita, or disposer of the life, neither on the other side could the occurre of Mars be Anareta, with Ptolemie in this case maketh the degree setting to be the onely Anaretta: C. HEYDON, Def. Judic. Astrol., p. 498. 1647 the Anaretta or Interficient Planet, is he who is placed in the eighth house: W. LILLY, *Chr. annotator (— — —), sb.: Eng. fr. Lat.: one who makes notes or comments on a text.

1646 as a good Annotator of ours delivereth, out of Maimonides: SIR TH. BROWN, Pseud. Ep., Bk. v. ch. xxi. p. 217 (1686). 18.. "Take at its just worth" (Subjoins an annotator) "What I give as hearsay": R. BROWNING, Protus, ad fin.

[Lat. annotator, noun of agent to annotare, = 'to make notes on'.]

annulus, sb.: Lat.: 'a ring', applied technically to various ring-like surfaces or solids.

1660 I dined with that great...discoverer of the phenomenon of Saturn's annulus: EVELYN, Diary, Vol. I. p. 366 (1872). 1752 The body of the amphibia has a number of circular annuli surrounding it, from the head to the extremity of the tail: JOHN HILL, Hist. of Animals, p. 101. [Jodrell] 1834 certain descriptions of fruit are supplied exclusively from a narrow annulus of soil: Edin. Rev., Vol. 60, p. 100. 1878 thus making it a portion of an annulus instead of a cylinder: G. G. SCOTT, Roy. Acad. Lect., Vol. I. p. 57. 1879 the main surrounding vault, if uncut by others, would assume the form of a portion of an annulus or ring: ib., Vol. II. p. 166. 1883 The eye [is] adorned with a reddish outer annulus: Sat. Rev., Vol. 55, p. 305.

annunciator (— — —), sb.: Eng. fr. Lat.: one who, or that which, announces; an officer in the Greek Church who announces coming festivals; an American name for the indicator connected with an electric bell showing from whence the summons comes.

1753 Annuntiator, in the Greek church, an officer whose business is to give notice of the feasts and holy days: CHAMBERS, Cycl., Suppl. 1846 appeal to Moses and the prophets as annunciators of the death of Jesus: TR. Strass Life of Jesus, § 107. [C. E. D.] 1878 Relay with annunciator disk: PRESCOTT, Speaking Telephone, &c. (New York).

annus magnus, phr.: Lat.: 'a great year', the period of time in which ancient astronomers supposed the constellations to complete a great cycle and arrive at the same place as they occupied at the beginning of the cycle; according to some ancient writers, 15,000 ordinary years.

1690 That which they [astronomers] call Annus Magnus, or the Great Year: T. BURNET, Theor. of Earth, Bk. III. ch. iv. p. 27. 1693 all that Space of Time is called the Great Year, Annus Magnus: J. RAY, Three Discourses, II. p. 330 (1713). bef. 1719 So that the compliment on this medal to the Emperor Adrian, is in all respects the same that Virgil makes to Pollio's son, at whose birth he supposes the annus magnus or Platonical year run out and renewed again with the opening of the golden age: ADDISON, Wks., Vol. I. p. 288 (Bohn, 1854). 1808 the idea of an annus magnus, one of the great astronomical periods by which so many days and years are circumscribed: Edin. Rev., Vol. 11, p. 272. 1834 the duration assigned to each of them [races] by the Divinity was...measured by the revolution of an annus magnus or great year: GRESWELL, on Parables, Vol. I. p. 347. — It is implied in this tradition that, after eight of these anni magni, or great years, each generation of mankind would have had its appointed turn of existence: ib.

1660 ANNUS MIRABILIS, 1650—60: EVELYN, Diary, Vol. I. p. 334 (1850). 1667 DRYDEN, Title. 1689 J. PARTRIDGE, Annus Mirabilis: or Strange and Wonderful Predictions gathered out of his Almanack, 1688. 1767 This has been every where an annis [sic] mirabilis for bad weather: LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, Vol. II. No. 188, p. 522 (1774). 1885 the years of evil fame which followed the annus mirabilis of 1815: T. HUGHES, in Good Words, p. 63.

anomal(e), adj., also used as sb.: Eng. fr. Fr. anomal, fem. anomale: irregular, anomalous; an anomaly, an instance of irregularity.

1530 what verbes be with them anomalies: PALSGR., sig. A vi r<sup>o</sup>. 1569 Whiche thinges because they haue neither measure, nor rule, are called Anomals: J. SANFORD, Agrippa's Van. Artes, 107. [N. E. D.] 1618 Fortune...hath likewise her Anomola: Relig. Wotton, p. 171 (1654).

ἀνομία, sb.: Gk.: lawlessness.

1652 By all this you see that amongst all irrational beings there is no ἀνομία, and therefore no ἀνομία, and therefore no ἀνομία: N. CULVERWEL, Light of Nature, ch. vi. p. 42. 1668 that [sin] is generally said to be ἀνομία, a transgression of the law: JOHN HOWE, Wks., p. 104/2 (1834). 1834 since it were a contradiction in terms to suppose the Pharisees could be inwardly full of ἀνομία, as these asserted: GRESWELL, on Parables, Vol. IV. p. 306. 1884 In the household of faith the pestilential influence of that lawlessness—that ἀνομία, — which is a chief spiritual disease of this era of the world's history, is not altogether unfelt: Tablet, p. 722/1.

anona, sb.: Sp. an(n)ona: name of the custard apple of tropical America, and in Bot. of plants of the same genus.

1604 As for the Blanc-mange, it is that Anona or Guanavana which grows in Tierra Firme, which is fashioned like vnto a pear... It is no whit meate, though they call it Blanc-mange: E. GRIMSTON, Tr. D'Acosta's Hist. W. Indies, Vol. I. Bk. iv. p. 251 (1880).

Anōnyma, a false feminine formation fr. Gk. ἀνώνυμος, masc. and fem. adj., = 'nameless', used to designate any well-dressed female of bad character who frequents fashionable resorts.

1864 Is that Anonyma driving twin ponies in a low phaeton, a parasol attached to her whip, and a groom with folded arms behind her? Bah! there are so many Anonymas now-a-days: G. A. SALA, Quite Alone, Vol. I. ch. i. p. 2.

anonyme, Fr., anōnymus, Lat.: sb.: a nameless person, one whose name is suppressed; a designation adopted to hide a person's own name, a pseudonym; an anonymous work. Anglicised recently as anonym, but no good authority is cited for the form in N. E. D.

1591 Remedies against Discontentment...by Anonymus: Title. 1652 This Dialogue is there placed among the Anonymis in regard I then knew not the Author: E. ASHMOLE, Theat. Chem. Brit., Annot., p. 484. 1654 to read all Authors, as Anonymo's, looking on the Sence, not Names of Books: R. WHITLOCK, Zootomia, p. 208. 1814 I thought an anonym within my fact with the public: BYRON, in Moore's Life, Vol. III. p. 67 (1832). — There was a mental reservation in my pact with the public, in behalf of anonymes: ib., p. 65.

*anorexia, sb.: Late Lat. fr. Gk. ἀνορεξία: want of appetite. The form anorexie may be through Fr.

1603 One while the Boulimie, then the Anorexie, | Then the Dog-hunger or the Bradypepsie: J. SYLVESTER, Tr. Du Bartas, Furies, 450. 1626 Anorexia, A queasiness of stomacke: COCKERAM, Pt. I. (2nd Ed.).

ansa, sb.: Lat.: a handle, a hold. In Astron. ansae are the projections of Saturn's ring, which have a handle-like appearance; formerly Anglicised as anses.

1652 Epictetus confessing that he had not the right ansa, the true apprehension of things: N. CULVERWEL, Light of Nature, ch. xii. p. 129. 1660 any one who deals freely...with this price of God's truth may from thence find a far better ansa of answering: J. SMITH, Sel. Disc., p. 108 (1673). 1666 the Ansa (or Checks of the Ballance): Phil. Trans., Vol. I. No. 14, p. 235. 1696 That God is willing and able are two ansas, two handles, on which both the hands of faith may take hold: D. CLARKSON, Pract. Wks., Nichol's Ed., Vol. I. p. 179 (1864).

anta. See antae or dante.

antae, Lat., antes, Eng. fr. Lat. perhaps through Fr. antes: sb. pl.: rarely anta, sing. (quasi-Lat.). The square pillars which form the front ends of the side walls of a Greek temple or similar building; hence, pilasters at the corners of buildings, or pilasters or pillars on opposite sides of a door.

1598 The first (according to Vitruv.) they call Anta, as you would say the fronte in the pilasters. Where the small pilasters are made in the corners, which are also from their own name called Antae: R. HAYDOCKE, Tr. Lomatius, Bk. I. p. 106. 1707 Antes, in Architecture are square Pilasters which the Antients placed at the Corners of their Temples: Glossogr. Angl. Nova. 1721 BAILEY. 1820 its only external ornament being a pediment supported by two Doric columns between the Antae, or pilasters, at the angles: T. S. HUGHES, Trav. in Sicily, Vol. I. ch. i. p. 25.

Antaeus: Lat. fr. Gk. Ἀνταῖος Gk. Mythol.: a Libyan giant, son of Earth, who gained fresh strength whenever he touched his mother, but Hercules (Herakles) held him off the ground in a wrestling bout and squeezed him to death.

1600 much like a second Antaeus, gathering greater strength and more forces: HOLLAND, Tr. Livy, Pref., sig. A vi v<sup>o</sup>. 1721 Antaeus could, by magic charms, | Recover strength when'er he fell; | Alcides held him in his arms, | And sent him up in air to Hell | Directors, thrown into the sea, | Recover strength and vigour there; | But may be tam'd another way, | Suspended for a while in air: SWIFT, South Sea Project, Wks., p. 593/1 (1869).

1. a figure in which a word is repeated in a different or contrary sense from that which it bore before.

1589 Antanaclasis, or the Rebound: PUTTENHAM, Eng. Poes., III. xix. p. 216 (1869). 1646 Nor would his resolutions have ever run into that mortal Antanaclasis, and desperate piece of Rhetorick, to be compriz'd in that he could not comprehend: SIR TH. BROWN, Pseud. Ep., Bk. VII. ch. xiii. p. 298. 1657 Antanaclasis, A figure when the same word is repeated in a divers if not in a contrary signification...also a retreat to the matter at the end of a long parenthesis: J. SMITH, Myst. Rhet., 107. [N.E.D.] 1681 And, in common speech...such antanaclases...are frequent: JOHN HOWE, Wks., p. 337/1 (1834). 1696 Antanaclasis, (Greek, a beating back) a Rhetorical figure, wherein the same word in likeness is repeated in a various signification: PHILLIPS, World of Words. 1711 he told me that he [Mr. Swan, the famous Punster] generally talked in the Paranomasia, that he sometimes gave into the Ploc, but that in his humble Opinion he shined most in the Antanaclasis: Spectator, No. 61, May 10, p. 100/1 (Morley).

2. the reiteration of words previously used, after a long parenthesis.

1657 [See 1].

Antar, the hero of a celebrated Arabian romance, based on the adventures of the warrior and poet more correctly named 'Antara ben Shaddād. Hence 'Antari' (pl. 'Anātira'), = 'a reciter of romances' (in Egypt), Lane, Mod. Egypt., p. 23.

1819 Thus I amused myself with acting the knight-errant; and, in my own mind, became another Antar: T. HOPE, Anast., Vol. II. ch. iv. p. 71 (1820). 1849 The brother of the Queen of the English is no less than an Antar: LORD BEACONSFIELD, Tancred, Bk. IV. ch. ii. p. 244 (1881). bef. 1863 listening to the story-teller reciting his marvels out of "Antar" or the "Arabian Nights": THACKERAY, Roundabout Papers, p. 5 (1879).

antar: Eng. fr. Fr. See antre.

1584 I have added to my rules, ante rules, and post rules. Vale: W. BATHE, Intro. to Skill of Song, sig. A iii v<sup>o</sup>. 1888 A comparison of this with the other list (ante, p. 62) shows: Westmoreland Note-Bk., p. 132.

ante bellum, phr.: Lat.: 'before the war': used in the United States as adj., in reference to the Great Civil War.

1883 A return to the ante bellum state of Society was, of course, impossible: Standard, Sept. 17, p. 5/2. 1888 During the ante bellum period the slavery interest maintained this rule [two-thirds rule] as an easy device for preventing the choice of a candidate objectionable to the South: New York Evening Post.

ante meridiem, phr.: Lat.: 'before noon'; usually abbreviated to A. M.

1647 if your hour of the day be in the morning, or as we say Ante Meridiem, or before noon: W. LILLY, Chr. Astrol., ch. iv. p. 41.

anteambulo, pl. -ōnes, sb.: Lat.: one who walks before, an usher.

1609 [A serving-man] is the anteambulo of a gentlewoman, the consequent of a gentleman: Man in Moore, 95 (1857). [N.E.D.] 1612—8 private gentlemen that were but ante ambulores [sic], and went only to accompany them: J. CHAMBERLAIN, in Court & Times of Jas. I., Vol. I. p. 229 (1848). 1641 An anteambulo to usher in a thousand pains: MAISTERTON, Serm., 18. [N.E.D.]

antecedents, sb.: Fr. antécédents: bygone incidents of a career or history (of persons or institutions), usually with reference to present character or future conduct. In other senses antecedents is the plural of the 14 c. antecedent, from Fr. antécédent borrowed again in the above special sense in the 19 c.

1841 They will...sift what the French call their antecedents, with the most scrupulous nicety: GEN. THOMPSON, Exerc., VI. 237. [N.E.D.] 1845 but the antécédents of that house were not favourable to this speculation: J. W. CROKER, Essays Fr. Rev., I. p. 13 (1857). 1852 To take office as a Protectionist, and then spontaneously abandon the principle of Protection, would involve a degree of baseness, from the imputation of which I should have hoped that my 'antecedents' (to borrow a French expression) might have relieved me: LORD DERBY, in Lord Malmesbury's Memoirs of an Ex-Minister, Vol. I. p. 299 (1884). 1854 she had been especially warned against Jack as a wicked young rogue, whose antécédents were woefully against him: THACKERAY, Newcomes, Vol. I. ch. xxviii. p. 321 (1879).

1820 Before dinner a dessert, or antecēnium, was placed upon the table: T. S. HUGHES, Trav. in Sicily, Vol. II. ch. iii. p. 51. 1820 I will retain nothing of the Grecian entertainments but the form of their supper which consisted as you know of the πρόποια or antecēnium: HANS BUSK, Banquet, Pref., p. vii.

1. a predecessor in office or work.

1494 He shulde folowe the stables of his antessours...and ponysshe mydoers: FABYAN, VI. clxi. 154.

1474 Of his grauntsirs fader and of alle his antecessours: CAXTON, Chesse, 53.

3. a predecessor in ownership of property.

1538 the deth of his antecessour at the common lawe: Tr. Littleton's Tenures, Bk. I. ch. ix. fol. 17 v<sup>o</sup>.

[From Lat. antecessor (whence ancestor through Fr. ancestre), noun of agent to antecēdere, = 'to go before'. The word may have come fr. 14, 15 cc. Fr. antecessour, a re-fashioning of anceisseur after Lat. antecessor-em, acc.]

*antennae, sb. pl.: Late Lat. fr. Lat. antenna, = 'sail-yard': a pair of sensory organs of insects and crustacea, also called horns or feelers; hence, metaph. organs of feeling; also, Bot. a pair of sensitive processes in the male flowers of certain orchids. The sing. antenna is sometimes used for one of the pair.

1646 Insects that have antenna, or long horns to feel out their way, as Butterflies and Locusts: SIR TH. BROWN, Pseud. Ep., Bk. III. ch. xviii. p. 121 (1686). 1797 Encyc. Brit. 1811 nothing could overcome those instinctive feelings, the antennae of our duty: L. M. HAWKINS, Countess, Vol. I. p. 376 (2nd Ed.). 1843 as for the drawing of the beetle, there were no antenna visible: E. A. POE, Wks., Vol. I. p. 8 (1884). 1845 The wasp...making short semi-circular casts, and all the time rapidly vibrating its wings and antennae: C. DARWIN, Journ. Beagle, ch. ii. p. 36.

antep(a)enultima, sb.: Late Lat.: Prosody: the syllable before the last but one of a word, the last syllable but two. Shortened to antepenult, adj. and sb. See paenultima.

1581 The French, in his whole language, hath not one word, that hath his accent in the last silable, saving two, called Antepenultima: SIDNEY, Def. Poesie, p. 71 (1868). 1589 antipenultima: PUTTENHAM, Eng. Poes., II. vi. p. 92 (1869). 1597 Your penult and antepenult notes: TH. MORLEY, Mus., p. 76. 1830 It [metrical accent] makes the penultima long, if the last is long, in thesis,... the antepenult, if the following syllable is short, in arsis: J. SEAGER, Tr. Hermann's Metres, Bk. I. ch. x. p. 20.

1. a hanging before a door.

1625 The Anteportae were of cloth of Gold of Bursia: PURCHAS, Pilgrims, Vol. II. Bk. ix. p. 1583.

2. an outer door or gate.

1644 Between the five large ante-ports are columns of enormous height: EVELYN, Diary, Vol. I. p. 126 (1872).

anterior (∟ ∟ = ∟), adj.: Eng. fr. Lat. anterior, comparative adj. fr. ante, = 'before', or fr. Fr. antérieur.

1. before, in front of, in reference to position or motion.

1541 From the anteryour parte commeth .vii. payre of sinewes sensytyfes: R. COPLAND, Tr. Guydd's Quest., &c., sig. E ii r<sup>o</sup>. 1678 the Anterior corner admitting y<sup>e</sup> first Proesse of the Cubille: J. BANISTER, Hist. Man, Bk. I. fol. 3 r<sup>o</sup>. — the anterior part of the inferior iawe: ib., Bk. IV. fol. 48 r<sup>o</sup>. 1627 So it is manifest; That where the Anterior Body giueth way, as fast as the Posterior commeth on, it maketh no Noise: BACON, Nat. Hist., Cent. II. § 115.

2. before, of time; prior, earlier; sometimes with the prep. to.

1728 And thus it doth appear, that the first Dunciad was the first Epic poem, written by Homer himself, and anterior even to the Iliad or Odyssey: M. SCRIBLERUS, in Pope's Wks., Vol. v. p. xl. (1757). 1882 Melchizedek, the kingly Priest of Peace, anterior and superior to Aaron: FARRAR, Early Days Chr., Vol. I. ch. xviii. p. 348.

Anteros: Gk. Ἀντέρος: a deity supposed by ancient Greeks to avenge slighted love, or a deity that resisted the power of love; see Eros. In Plato, ἀντέρος, = 'returned love', 'love for love'.

1600 What! feather'd Cupid masqued, | And masked like Anteros? B. JONSON, Cynth. Rev., v. 3, Wks., p. 103a (1860). 1817 He [Iamblicus] who from out their fountain dwellings raised | Eros and Anteros, at Gadara: BYRON, Manfred, II. ii. Wks., Vol. xi. p. 33 (1832).

antesignānus, sb.: Lat.: one of a chosen band of Roman soldiers who fought before the standard (ante signum) and defended it; hence in Eng. Lit. metaph. a champion, a precursor (q. v.). Anglicised as antesignan(e).

1602 so as what to make of him for my part I know not, vnlesse an Antesignane or immediate forerunner of Antichrist: W. WATSON, Quodlibets of Relig. & State, p. 325. — being like antesignanes of some horrible monster to be brought forth very shortly after: ib., p. 17. 1611 Nicolaus Serrarius the Antesignanus of all the Jesuitical familie used me more kindly and familiarly: T. CORVAT, Cruditels, Vol. II. p. 438 (1776). 1657 the most wise Hermes and most pious Philosopher of reverend antiquity the Antesignan of Natural Philosophers: H. PINNELL, Philos. Ref., p. 214.

CAWDRAV, Treas. of Similies, p. 212. bef. 1609 I see their antique pen would have express'd | Even such a beauty as you master now: SHAKS., Son., cvl. 7. 1665 The Antick Romans, who...hated Digamy: SIR TH. HERBERT, Trav., p. 46 (1677).

1. adj.: 2. old-fashioned, archaic, antiquated, out of date, stale.

1549 dooeth it shew such an antike maiestee: W. THOMAS, Hist. Ital., fol. 24<sup>ro</sup>. 1600 O good old man, how well in thee appears | The constant service of the antique world: SHAKS., As Y. L. It., II. 3, 57. bef. 1609 And your true rights be term'd a poet's rage | And stretched metre of an antique song: — Son., xvii. 12.

1. adj.: 3. in the Classical style of Ancient Greece and Rome; hence, the antique = 'the Classical style'.

1644 The design is mixed, partly antique, partly modern: EVELYN, Diary, Vol. I. p. 118 (1872).

II. sb.: 1. a person of ancient times: Obs.

II. sb.: 2. a work or relic of ancient art.

1530 If this antique were closed in golde, it were a goodly thynge: PALSGR., fol. cxc 2<sup>o</sup>/2. 1650 He led us into a stately chamber furnished...with... antiques in brass: EVELYN, Diary, Vol. I. p. 271 (1872). 1829 The common antiques represent the most perfect forms and proportions: Edin. Rev., Vol. 50, p. 245.

antirrhinum, -on, sb.: Lat. fr. Gk. ἀντίρρινον, = 'snap-dragon', lit. 'with a counterfeited snout' (pis, stem ῥιν-): name of a genus of plants including the Snap-dragons and Toad-flaxes, Nat. Order Scrophulariaceae; the greater a. is popularly 'snap-dragon', the smaller a. (A. Orlantium) is a wild, creeping or trailing plant, popularly called antirrhinum.

1548 Antirrhinon is of two sortes, the one is described of Plinie with leaues lyke flax and the other of Dioscorides with the leaues of pimpinel. Plinies antirrhinon maye be called in English calfe snoute. The other maye be called brode calfe snoute: W. TURNER, Names of Herbs. 1651 Antirrhinum is an herbe lyke vnto pympnel: — Herb., sig. C vi 2<sup>o</sup>. 1678 The great Antirrhinum hath straight round stemmes...the great Antirrhinum...The small Antirrhinum: H. LYTE, Tr. Dodon's Herb., Bk. II. p. 179. 1664 Sow Antirrhinum; or you may set it: EVELYN, Kal. Hort., p. 205 (1729). 1767 double feverfew, antirrhinum, scarlet-lychnis: J. ABERCROMBIE, Ev. Man own Gardener, p. 551 (1803). 1797 Encyc. Brit.

antiscii, sb. pl.: Late Lat. fr. Late Gk. ἀντίσκοι, = 'casting shadows opposite ways': folk whose respective shadows fall at the same time in opposite directions. Such folk must be on opposite sides of the ecliptic (Dicts. say 'equator'), and on a Great Circle passing through the point in which the line joining the centres of the earth and the sun cuts the earth's surface. At noon the meridian is such a Great Circle, and so the term antiscii has been confined to folk who are on the same meridian.

antiscion, pl. antiscia, sb.: Late Gk. ἀντίσκοιον, neut. of ἀντίσκιος, adj., = 'casting shadow the opposite way': Astrol.: title of signs of the Zodiac equidistant on opposite sides from Cancer and Capricorn.

1598 And whether they bee in signes beholding one another, or in signes commanding or obeying, or if one be in the Antiscia of the other, or in the Neuena or Dodecatemoria of the other: G. C., Math. Phis. (after F. Wither's Tr. Dario's Astrolog.), sig. B 2<sup>ro</sup>. 1647 the Antiscions of the Planets. The Antiscion Signes are those, which are of the same vertue and are equally distant from the first degree of the two Tropick Signes: W. LILLY, Chr. Astrol., ch. xvi. p. 90.

antistrophē, sb.: Late Lat. fr. Gk. ἀντιστροφή, = 'a counter-turning'.

1. [orig. the return movement of a Classical chorus (q. v.), from left to right, exactly answering in dance-rhythm to the previous turn (from the front across the orchestra) called strophe (q. v.).] A portion of a metrical composition exactly corresponding in rhythm to a former portion called the strophē.

1671 Strophe, Antistrophe, or Epode...were a kind of Stanza's fram'd only for the Musick then usd with the Chorus that sung: MILTON, Sams. Agon., Introd. 1767 [Gray, in his Pindarics] had shackled himself with strophe, antistrophe, and epode: HOR. WALPOLE, Letters, Vol. III. p. 97 (1857). 1840 The knight and the maiden had rung their antiphonic changes on the fine qualities of the departing Lady, like the Strophe and Antistrophe of a Greek play: BARHAM, Ingolds. Leg., p. 161 (1865). 1887 It is a pity to carry to such extremes a protest against the unsound presumption that strophe and antistrophe should correspond by syllables and quantities: Athenæum, Apr. 30, p. 570/3.

2. a reversed position or relation.

1605 The latter branch...hath the same relation or antistrophe that the former hath: BACON, Adv. Learn., II. ix. § 3. [N.E.D.] 1611 Antistrophe, An Antistrophe; or alternall conversion of two things, which bee somewhat alike: COTGR.

3. Rhet. the figure of retort, antistrophon.

1625 The renewing of the Contract is a flat Antistrophe, and may truly be retorted upon the French: Tr. Camden's Hist. Elis., 1. 99 (1688). [N.E.D.]

4. Rhet. and Gram. inversion of the relations of words.

1738 Antistrophe is a figure in grammar, whereby two terms or things, mutually dependent one on the other, are reciprocally converted. As if one should say, the master of the servant, and the servants of the master: CHAMBERS, Cycl.

5. Rhet. the ending of several consecutive clauses with the same word.

1589 Antistrophe, or the Counter turne...two little ditties which our selues in our younger yeares played vpon the Antistrophe, for so is the figures name in Greeke: PUTTENHAM, Eng. Poes., III. xix. p. 208 (1869). 1696 Antistrophe, gr. a Rhetorical Figure, namely, when several Members of a Sentence end all with the same word: PHILLIPS, World of Words.

antistrophon, sb.: Gk. neut. of adj. ἀντίστροφος, = 'turned the opposite way': Rhet.: a retort, an argument of an opponent turned against him.

1611 But for the point wherein you touch vs...it is Antistrophon, and turneth a great deale better vpon you: SPEED, Hist. Gl. Brit., IX. xxiv. 55. [N. E. D.] 1642 I turne his Antistrophon upon his owne head: MILTON, Apol. Smect., Wks., 267 (1851). [id.]

*antithesis, pl. antithesēs, sb.: Gk. ἀντίθεσις.

1. abstract. the setting of one idea or expression against another so as to exhibit their opposition or dissimilarity.

1635 those antithesis and puttyng one contrary agenst another: G. JOY, Apol. to W. Tindale, p. 17 (1883). 1603 The reversing of an objection by way of Antithesis may be placed, and carrieth with it a good grace: HOLLAND, Tr. Plut. Mor., p. 305. 1668 When he Writes the serious way, the highest flight of his fancy is some miserable Antithesis, or seeming Contradiction: DRYDEN, Ess. on Dram. Po., Wks., Vol. I. p. 2 (1701). 1755 his speech was set, and full of antithesis: HOR. WALPOLE, Letters, Vol. II. p. 484 (1857).

1603 in pursuing and prosecuting this Antithesis [= a statement of difference]: HOLLAND, Tr. Plut. Mor., p. 83. 1603 Th' Antithesis of Blesed and Cursed States, | Subject to Good and Euill Magistrates: J. SYLVESTER, Tr. Du Bartas, Babylon, p. 331 (1608). 1630 But from these Antipodes to goodness, by their Antithesis to nature, I appeale to my conscience, which is a witness to me that can neither accuse or condemne me: JOHN TAYLOR, Wks., sig. 2 Aaa i r°. 1654 the greatest Antithesis Nature, or Poetry ever found out: R. WHITLOCK, Zootomia, p. 238. 1680 Here God is called the Father of Spirits, or of souls, and that in an emphatical antithesis, or contradistinction to our natural fathers who are called the fathers of our flesh, or bodies only: J. FLAVEL, Soul of Man, Wks., Vol. II. p. 515 (1799).

2. concrete. a clause or sentence set against another which precedes.

1635 Whence comes that elegant Antithesis in the Scripture, Bee not drunke, &c.: S. WARD, Sermons, p. 230. 1751 Tropes, figures, antitheses, epigrams: LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, Vol. II. No. 45, p. 193 (1774). 1755 but those antitheses [sic] were full of argument: HOR. WALPOLE, Letters, Vol. II. p. 484 (1857).

2 b. a counter-thesis (see thesis), a proposition stated in opposition to another proposition.

2 c. metaph. that which is opposite, contrary, contrasted; catachrest. a conjunction of contraries.

1678 Moreover Xenophanes looking upon the Deity, as the Cause of All things and above All things, placed it above Motion and Rest, and all those Antitheses of Inferiour Beings: CUDWORTH, Intell. Syst., Bk. I. ch. iv. p. 380. 1709 the Antitheses of lonely dark and mournful Nights! MRS. MANLEY, New Atal., Vol. II. p. 241 (2nd Ed.). bef. 1739 Now high, now low, now master up, now miss, | And he himself one vile Antithesis: POPE, Prolog. to Satires, 325, Wks., Vol. IV. p. 40 (1757). 1813 She is...a vile antithesis of a Methodist and a Tory: BYRON, in Moore's Life, Vol. II. p. 216 (1832). 1859 He was, as it were, the antithesis of my own nature: H. J. PRINCE, Journal, p. 273. 1886 The picture is...academicall, accomplished, artificial, and ornate. It is the antithesis of real and spontaneous art: Athenaeum, Apr. 10, p. 494/1.

1. antithesis 1.

1579 a figure of Rhetoricke called Antitheton: which is, opposition: NORTH, Tr. Plutarch, p. 848 (1612). 1589 PUTTENHAM, Eng. Poes., III. xix. p. 219 (1869).

2. an antithetic statement, an instance of antithesis 1; less correctly, an instance of antithesis 2 b.

1603 rhetoricall tropes and figures: to wit, his antitheta, consisting of contraries, his parisa, standing upon equall weight and measure of syllables, his homooptata, precisely observing the like termination: HOLLAND, Tr. Plut. Mor., p. 988. 1857 Equally true is the popular antithet, that misfortunes never come single: C. KINGSLEY, Two Years Ago, ch. xxvi. p. 456 (1877).

antoeci, sb. pl.: Gk. ἀντοικοι, 'with opposed homes' (οἶκοι): folk who dwell at the same distance from the equator on opposite sides thereof; in Eng. use, limited to folk who dwell on the same meridian.

1646 the conditions of Antaci, Paraci, and Antipodes: SIR TH. BROWN, Pseud. Ep., Bk. VI. ch. II. p. 235 (1686). — therefore the trial hereof at a considerable interval, is best performed at the distance of the Antaci: ib., Bk. II. ch. III. p. 57. 1665 The Antaci are...opposite, but vary neither in Meridian nor æquidistance from the Horizon, respecting either Hemisphere: SIR TH. HERBERT, Trav., p. 5 (1677).

antonomasia, sb.: Gk. ἀντονομασία: the use of an epithet, appellative, patronymic or descriptive phrase instead of (ἀντι) a proper name (ὄνομα); or vice versa the use of a representative proper name instead of a title or descriptive phrase; also, loosely, the substitution of another designation for one which is more common and obvious.

1589 Antonomasia, or the Surnamer,...as he that would say: not king Philip of Spaine, but the Western king: PUTTENHAM, Eng. Poes., III. xvi[i]. p. 192 (1869). 1612 were so great friends, as they were named for excellency & by Antonomasia, by al those that knew them, the two friends: T. SHELTON, Tr. Don Quixote, Pt. IV. ch. vi. p. 343. 1672 Smiting hammers are prepared for the bodies of fools, for so the Scripture by Antonomasia calls the damned: Tr. J. E. Nieremberg's Temp. & Etern., Bk. IV. ch. x. p. 432. 1780 I shall borrow a few lines of this poem, which are mentioned in the Edda among the Hringakeiti, and that prove how far these poets went in their Antonomasies: Tr. Von Troil's Lett. on Iceland, p. 201 (2nd Ed.).

1604 Wherein of Antars vast, and Desarts idle, | Rough Quarries, Rocks, Hills, whose heads touch heauen, | It was my hint to speake: SHAKS., Oth., I. 3, 140 (1623).

1543 TRAHERON, Tr. Vigo's Chirurg., fol. ix v°/1. 1603 a Fistula in Ano [abl.]: HOLLAND, Tr. Plut. Mor., p. 138. 1676 SHADWELL, Virtuoso, III. p. 42. 1704 SWIFT, Tale Tub, Wks., p. 83/1 (1869). 1741 J. OZELL, Tr. Tournefort's Voy. Levant, Vol. I. p. 229.

1649 appointyng .xii. citizens...to gouerne the same [citie of Florence], namyng them Antiani: W. THOMAS, Hist. Ital., fol. 142 r°. 1787 The Executive Power is composed of a Gonfaloniere, and nine Anziani, who together govern the Republic: P. BECKFORD, Lett. fr. Ital., Vol. I. p. 428 (1805).

Aonian, belonging to Aonia (ἄων-) a district of Boeotia (q. v.) in which Mt. Helicon (q. v.) sacred to the Muses was situated. Hence Aonian = 'poetic', 'of poets', 'of poetry'.

1626 Aonian band, The Muses: COCKERAM, Pt. I. (2nd Ed.). 1667 That with no middle flight intends to soar | Above th' Aonian mount: MILTON, P. L., I. 15. 1742 above | Th' Aonian Mount: YOUNG, Night Thoughts, IV. p. 61 (1773). 1743 And they are sure of bread who swink and moil; | But a fell tribe th' Aonian hive despoil: THOMSON, Castle of Indolence, II. ii.

1578 the great Arterie, named Aorta: J. BANISTER, Hist. Man, Bk. I. fol. 25 r°. 1621 that great artery called aorta: R. BURTON, Anat. Mel., Pt. I, Sec. I, Mem. 2, Subs. 5, Vol. I. p. 26 (1827). 1667 Phil. Trans., Vol. II. No. 25, p. 462. 1691 a large arterial Channel passing from the pulmonary Artery immediately into the Aorta, or great Artery: J. RAY, Creation, Pt. II. p. 307 (1701). 1699 it's Diameter well near equalled that of the Aorta: M. LISTER, Journ. to Paris, p. 65. 1787 A double set of aorta and vena cava would be as wonderful a deviation from the common course of nature: Genl. Mag., p. 1070/1.

1684 We entered each aoull [village] in the same style, sending goats and sheep flying: EDM. O'DONOVAN, Merv., ch. xxii. p. 231 (New York). — a place... where there is a very considerable aoull: ib., ch. xxv. p. 282. 1884 one or two of the mounted young men are sent from the aul, or collection of tents: H. LANSDALL, Steppes of Tartary, in Leisure Hour.

Ap, common prefix forming Welsh surnames, meaning 'of', 'son of'. It often loses its vowel as in Price, Pritchard, Pugh.

1654 never troubling themselves to know, whether it were a younger Brothers, or Elders Building, leaving out the many Aps of its Pedigree: R. WHITLOCK, Zootomia, p. 410. bef. 1668 It would tire a Welshman to reckon up how many Aps 'tis removed from an Anall: J. CLEVELAND, Wks., p. 83 (1687). 1778 Rowland Lee, Bishop of Lichfield, and President of the Marches of Wales, in the reign of Henry VIII. sat at one of the Courts on a Welsh cause, and wearied with the quantity of Aps in the jury, directed that the panel should assume their last name, or that of their residence: and that Thomas ap Richard ap Howell ap Jevan Vychan should for the future be reduced to the poor dissyllable Mostyn, no doubt to the great mortification of many an antient line: PENNANT, Tour in Wales, Vol. I. p. 17 (80 Ed.).

apage, interj.: Lat. fr. Gk. ἀπαγε: away! begone! avaunt! Used in reference to the rebuke to Satan, Matt., iv. 10, ἀπαγε Σατανά, Vulg., vade Satana.

1647 God's blessing be on that blessed heart...can entertain all wicked attempts and assaults with this Apage of our Saviour: JOHN TRAPP, Com. New Test., p. 34/2 (1868). 1866 There is no apage Sathanas! so potent as ridicule: J. R. LOWELL, Biglow Papers, No. III. (Halifax).

apanage (apanage), sb.: Eng. fr. Fr. apanage, appanage, appennage.

1. provision for the maintenance of a younger son of a sovereign.

1605 Valois was but the Appanage...of Charles younger sonne to Philip the second: CAMDEN, Rem., 97. [N. E. D.] bef. 1626 He became suitor for the earldom of Chester, a kind of appanage to Wales, and using to go to the king's son: BACON, [C. E. D.] 1818 The king's brother Charles...died suddenly in Guienne, which had finally been granted as his appanage: HALLAM, Middle Ages, Vol. I. p. 88 (1856). 1837 Molé has presented to the Chambers a projet de loi for an appanage for the Duc de Nemours, which is to consist of...certain forests in Normandy: H. GREVILLE, Diary, p. 112.

2. a dependency, a territory in a dependent relation to a state.

1807 Ireland...the most valuable appanage of our empire: SYD. SMITH, Plymley's Lett., Wks., II. 166/2 (1859). [N. E. D.]

3. a specially appropriated possession, a natural or usual possession, advantage, accessory, attribute.

1663 One of the necessary Appanages of God's Omnipotency: SIR G. MACKENZIE, Relig. Stoic, v. 36 (1685). [N. E. D.] 1691—2 Public Employment and an active Life prefer'd to Solitude with all its Appanage: WOOD, Ath. Oxon., Vol. IV. p. 466 (Bliss, 1820). 1731 Had he thought it fit | That wealth should be the appanage of wit: SWIFT, [C. E. D.] 1828 more pleasure and less comfort seem the appanage of the French: Engl. in France, Vol. II. p. 282. 1836 The principal use of these imperial descendants seems to be the formation of a courtly appanage, to swell the Emperor's state: J. F. DAVIS, Chinese, Vol. I. ch. vii. p. 274. 1848 the legitimate appanage of novelist or poet: LORD LYTTON, Harold, Ded., p. iv. (3rd Ed.). 1852 And the famous Count de Lemos, the viceroy of Naples...kept, as an appanage to his viceroyalty, a poetical court: PRESCOTT, Critic. Misc., p. 666 (1880).

apathy (apaty), sb.: Eng. fr. Fr. apathie: insensibility to suffering, lack of emotion or passion, lack of interest in circumstances. With Stoics, absolute indifference to all vicissitudes of feeling or condition, perfect equanimity.

1603 the name of Eupathies, i. good affections and not of Apathies, that is to say, Impossibilities: HOLLAND, Tr. Plut. Mor., p. 74. 1709 Whence can come such an Apathy, such an Insipidity: MRS. MANLEY, New Atal., Vol. II. p. 138 (2nd Ed.).

ἀπαξ λεγόμενον, pl. -μενα, phr.: Gk.: lit. (anything) 'said once': a word or expression only found once in the extant records of a language.

1667 It is ἀπαξ λεγόμενον, read only here; and hence this variety of interpretations: JOHN TRAPP, Com. Old Test., Vol. IV. p. 472/1 (1868). 1801 [the book of Job's] very great antiquity, and uncommon sublimity of elevation, occasioning a greater number of ἀπαξ λεγόμενα, and expressions difficult to be understood: MAGGE, Atonement & Sacrifice, p. 154/1 (1845). 1845 In his lists he has omitted most of the ἀπαξ λεγόμενα: Bibl. Sacra, Vol. II. p. 388. 1882 The number of the ἀπαξ λεγόμενα is remarkable, and some of them are full of picturesqueness: FARRAR, Early Days Chr., Vol. I. ch. xi. p. 236. 1887 One curious ἀπαξ λεγόμενον is σωαυτε (v. r. suate), which cannot well be, as explained in the glossary, the Old French salveteit, safety: Athenaeum, Dec. 3, p. 740/3.

1590 In graving with Pygmalion to contend, | Or painting with Apelles, doubtless the end | Must be disgrace: MARLOWE, Jew of Malta, Ep. to the Stage, 1633, p. 143 (Dyce). 1599 O rare and excellent picture, though not altogether matching the skill of Apelles: HAKLUTT, Voyages, &c., p. 659 (1809). 1603 Whom heer to paint doth little me behouee, | After so many rare Apelleses, | As in this Age our Albion nourishes: J. SYLVESTER, Tr. Du Bartas, Furies, p. 286 (1608). 1665 the roof imbosed with gold, and so exquisitely painted as if Erseene the Apelles of Persia had pencill'd it: SIR TH. HERBERT, Trav., p. 132 (1677). 1820 a celebrated painter of saints for Greek churches, the Apelles of his day: T. S. HUGHES, Trav. in Sicily, Vol. I. ch. x. p. 315.

1866 It is one of the most memorable of the striking aperçus which abound in Plato: MILL, Dissert., Vol. III. p. 355 (1867). 1883 Elated with this brilliant aperçu, he immediately proceeds to argue: XIX Cent., Oct., p. 614. 1884 Lady Violet Greville again gives us one of her aperçus of present-day society, set as a novel: Pall Mall Gaz., Feb. 6, p. 6/1. 1887 It is simply commonplace whist strategy, such as no one having the least aperçu of the game could possibly avoid: R. A. PROCTOR, in Longman's Mag., No. liv. Apr., p. 641.

aperitive (aperitive), apertive (aperitive), adj.: Eng. fr. Fr. aperitif, Old Fr. apertif, fem. -ive: aperient, tending to open. Also as sb.: aperient medicine.

1540 the Oyle of Scorpions, Petroleum, or other apertiffic Oyle: RAYNALD, Birth Man., p. 184 (1613). 1543 a bayne of thynges apertiuie or openyng ayde them: TRAHERON, Tr. Vigo's Chirurg., fol. xxxv rō/2. — Some [tentes] ben called apertiuie, bycause they kepe open the mouthe of the woundes, & sores: ib., fol. cxliii vō/1.

1470 Consyderyng well his knightly aperte: HARDING, Chron., ccxviii. [N. E. D.]

1. a small rod at the top of a Roman flamen's cap. The orig. Lat. sense.

1603 Upon his head a hat of delicate wool, whose top ended in a cone, and was thence called apex: B. JONSON, Entertainments, Wks., p. 532/1 (1860).

2. the tip, top, point, peak, projection, sharp corner of anything; the vertex of a triangle, pyramid, or cone.

1601 They all have illumination from the holy ghost, as from a perpendicular Apex or Zenith over their heads: A. C., Ans. to Let. of a Jesuited Gent., p. 79/2. 1672 curiously figur'd Planes, that terminated in a solid Angle or Apex: R. BOYLE, Virtues of Gems, p. 74. 1673 On his head he wears a Ducal Cap, called il Corno, because it hath an Apex or horn arising above the top of it: J. RAY, Journ. Low Countr., p. 187. 1826 the apex of the pyramid of his ambition was at length visible: LORD BEACONSFIELD, Viv. Grey, Bk. II. ch. i. p. 22 (1881). 1885 The domical head...may be seen at the eastern apex of the eyot: Athenaeum, Sept. 5, p. 310/2.

1641 Now...I am neere the Apex of this question: R. BROOKE, Nat. Eng. Episc., 21. [N. E. D.]

3. Bot. an anthera (q. v.); any pointed portion of a plant.

1673 It hath a fine leaf, a small root...reddish stalks, an umbel of white flowers, to which succeed small round seeds with purple apices: J. RAY, Journ. Low Countr., p. 136. 1691 the figure and number of the stamina and their apices, the figure of the Stile and Seed-vessel, and the number of Cells into which it is divided: — Creation, Pt. I. p. 113 (1701). 1693 Flowers serve to embrace and cherish the Fruit, while it is yet tender...for the Protection and Security of the Apices, which are no idle or useless Part: — Three Discourses, II. p. 124 (1713). 1741 and from their junctures or Bosoms (Arm-pits, the Author calls 'em) arise five Stamina...a Line high, with Apices: J. OZZEL, Tr. Tournefort's Voy. Levant, p. 208. 1881 The clusters of roundish spore-cases, when ripened, give, by their light-brown hue, to the apex of the frond the appearance of a flower: F. G. HEATH, Garden Wild, ch. vii. p. 83. — Opposite pairs of oblong blunt-pointed pinnules, and are terminated, at their apices, by single pinnules: ib.

4. Philol. a horn or projection on a Hebrew letter.

1652 Name but the time if you can, whenever right Reason did oppose one jot or apex of the word of God: N. CULVERWEL, Light of Nat., ch. i. p. 6. 1657 there is not an apex whereon hangs not a mountain of sense, as the Rabbins use to say: JOHN TRAPP, Com. Old Test., Vol. IV. p. 151/2 (1868).

1635 The words...answer punctually and identically to every apex or tittle of St. Matthew's quotation: JACKSON, Creed, VIII. xxvii. Wks., VIII. 113. [N. E. D.]

*aphaeresis, sb.: Late Lat. fr. Gk. ἀφαίρεσις, = 'a taking away': used by Lat. Grammarians for the removal of a letter or syllable from the beginning of a word as in Eng. fence for defence, biliment for habiliment, censer for incenser or encenser, state for estate (see aphesis).

aphasia, sb.: Mod. Lat. coinage fr. Gk. φάσις, = 'speech': used instead of aphemia or alalia to express 'loss of the faculty of speech' by M. Trousseau, 1864; properly, unintelligibility caused by unconscious omission or misuse of sounds or words, a state due to defective coordination of the nerves connected with the articulatory organs, distinguished from aphemia, physical inability to articulate, and aphonia (q. v.).

1868 I had at first adopted the name 'Aphemia' on M. Broca's authority, but I have now, on the authority of the savants I have named, substituted for it that of 'Aphasia': Tr. Trousseau's Clin. Med., Vol. I. p. 218. [N. & Q.] 1886 This is the disease of aphasia, arising from a derangement in the organ of language: J. MCCOSH, Psych., p. 104.

aphelion, aphélium, sb.: Late Lat. coinage by Kepler fr. Gk. ἀπο-, = 'away from', ἥλιος, = 'the sun': the point of a planet's orbit at which it is farthest from the sun, the opposite to perihelion (q. v.). Coined on the analogy of apogee (q. v.). Also used metaph.

1666 The apogœum of the sun or the aphelium of the earth ought to be about the 28th degree of Cancer: Tr. Hobbes' Elem. Philos., 443 (1839). [N. E. D.] 1659 The Aphelia, and Nodes ought not to stand still (in rigour) but to move continually some small quantity: S. FOSTER, De Instrumentis Plan., p. 43. 1666 not at present in the Perihelium of its Orbe, but nearer its Aphelium: Phil. Trans., Vol. I. No. 12, p. 240. 1721 BAILEY. 1812 Apogee, if the Sun be supposed to revolve, Aphelion, if the Earth: WOODHOUSE, Astron., xix. 206.

apheisis, sb.: Gk. ἀφεσις, 'a letting go': recorded in N. E. D. as a term to express aphaeresis (q. v.), when an unaccented short vowel is lost at the beginning of a word.

1880 Suggested by DR. J. A. H. MURRAY in Presid. Address Phil. Soc.

apheta, sb.: Late Lat. fr. post-Classical Gk. ἀφῆτης, 'one who lets off' (an engine for throwing missiles), also applied to heavenly bodies: Astrol.: the giver of life in a nativity.

1603 [See anareta]. 1647 You may always import a danger of death, when you find the Apheta come to the hostill Beams of the killing Planet: W. LILLY, Chr. Astrol., ch. clvi. p. 650. 1721 BAILEY. 1819 When...a number of planets are so situated that it seems doubtful which is the Apheta: J. WILSON, Dict. Astrol.

*aphis, pl. aphides, sb.: Mod. Lat.: the name given by Linnaeus to the various species of plant-lice. They are extremely prolific, multiplying in winged and wingless generations alternately by metagenesis and parthenogenesis. They produce honey-dew.

1771 On the peach and nectarine indeed the Aphides are the same, nor do I find on these trees more than one sort: Phil. Trans., Vol. LXI. p. 183. 1883 eyes whose eagle glance not so much as an aphid could escape: M. E. BRADDOCK, Golden Calif., Vol. II. ch. i. p. 32.

*aphōnia, sb.: Late Lat. fr. Gk. ἀφῳνία, 'speechlessness': loss of voice, voicelessness; i.e. inability to emit vocal sound through the larynx, generally due to disease or obstruction of the vocal chords; not to be confused with apheemia or failure of the articulatory organs. Sometimes in 19 c. Anglicised as aphony.

1779 A violent convulsive disease, somewhat similar to the above, though, if I recollect right, not attended with the aphonia, was successfully treated in the same way by DR. WATSON: Phil. Trans., Vol. LXIX. i. p. 5.

*aphorism (Δ = Δ), sb.: Eng. fr. Fr. aphorisme, afforisme.

1. a concise statement of a scientific principle; orig. one of the medical Aphorisms of Hippocrates.

1528 as is sayde in the foresayde aphorisme: PAYNELL, Tr. Reg. Sal., sig. T i v°. — as Hippocrates saith in y<sup>e</sup> above allegat aphorisme: ib., sig. E i v°. 1541 as Ipcoras sayth in his Aphorismes: R. COPLAND, Tr. Guydo's Quest., &c., sig. A ii v°. — of this vtylyte Arnoide of vylle maketh an aphorisme: ib., sig. P i v°. 1543 Thus Aphorisme is trewe in holowe vicerres, and in vicerres caused of colde exitures: TRAHERON, Tr. Vigo's Chirurg., fol. cxxiii r<sup>o</sup> v<sup>o</sup>. 1548 Galen, in the aphorisme of Ipcoces, saying: Oportet seipsum non solum: T. VICARY, Engl. Treas., p. 5 (1626). 1584 But in a sicknesse that will ende within three or four dayes, we should vse a dyet which GALEN calleth in his commentarie vpon the foresaide Aphorisme, Summe tenuis victus: T. COGHAN, Haven of Health, p. 173. 1620 On the Medicine of the Mind, wherein applying the Aphorisms which are written for the health and cure of the Body: BRENT, Tr. Soave's Hist. Counc. Trent, p. xl. (1676). 1621 their [astrologers'] aphorismes are to be read in Albubator, Pontanus, Skoner, &c.: R. BURTON, Anat. Mel., Pt. 3, Sec. 3, Mem. 1, Subs. 2, Vol. II. p. 429 (1827). 1628 his discourse is all Aphorismes, though his reading be onely Alexis of Piemont: J. EARLE, Microcosm., p. 25 (1868).

1589 certaine Aphorismes that Awarreon had pend downe as principles of loues follies: R. GREENE, Menaphon, p. 24 (1880). 1601 that notable Aphorisme, worthe to bee kept and observed as a diuine Oracle: HOLLAND, Plin. N. H., Bk. 18, ch. 24, Vol. I. p. 583. 1609 this Aphorisme was set downe, That if such a fire-light were seene in the skie, there ought no battaille be fought, nor any such matter attempted: — Tr. Marc., Bk. 25, p. 263. 1642 'tis an olde Aphorisme, Oderunt omnes, quem metuunt: HOWELL, Instr. For. Trav., p. 37 (1869). 1646 though sometimes they are flattered with that Aphorism, will hardly believe, The voice of the People to be the voice of God: SIR TH. BROWN, Pseud. Ep., Bk. I. ch. iii. p. 8 (1686). 1870 the law of the empire is concluded in the Roman aphorism, quod Principi placuit, legis habet vigorem: E. MULFORD, Nation, ch. xviii. p. 343.

[From Late Lat. aphorismus, aforismus, fr. Gk. ἀφορισμός, = 'a definition'.]

*Aphroditē: Gk. Ἀφροδίτη: the goddess of beauty of Gk. Mythol., the Lat. Venus (q. v.), mother of Love (Eros, Ἔρως, Lat. Cupido), said to have been born from the foam (ἀφρός) of the sea. Hence aphrodisiac(al), = 'tending to cause venereal excitement'.

bef. 1658 A Medal where grim Mars turn right, | Proves a smiling Aphrodite [sic]: J. CLEVELAND, Wks., p. 354 (1687). 1819 He followed me to those temples where Aphrodite wears no veil, in order to preach to me decency: T. 3. the applying of one's faculties (generally intellectual) to anything, sedulous attention, attentive study.

1685 but those wicked creatures took him from off all application becoming so great a King: EVELYN, Diary, Vol. II. p. 217 (1872). 1696 unworthy the study and application of the noblest persons: — Corresp., Vol. III. p. 361.

4. the applying of one's self (to persons), an approaching as a dependant or solicitor of favors.

1605 Not that I can tax or condemn the...application of learned men to men in fortune: BACON, Adv. Learn., i. iii. § 10.

5. the applying one's self (to persons) as a petitioner, candidate for an office, or merely as one who makes a request (even as a matter of course or as a right); concrete, the appeal or request made.

1648 As touching applications to his Majesty, be confident none will be: EVELYN, Corresp., Vol. III. p. 27 (1872). 1660 Came the most happy tidings of his Majesty's...applications to the Parliament: — Diary, Vol. I. p. 354. 1687 he added that this was not the application of one party only: ib., Vol. II. p. 278.

applicator ( = 1 - ), sb.: Eng.: applier, one who applies; Med. anything used for applying a medicament.

1659 'Tis ridiculous...to content themselves either with no idoneous physitions and fit medicines, or with such quacking applications and applicators as are no way apt for the work: GAUDEN, Tears of the Church, p. 494. [Davies]

[Formed fr. Eng. vb. apply, or fr. Eng. application, as if noun of agent to Lat. applicare, = 'to apply'.]

appliqué, sb.: Fr.: work in embroidery laid on another material; also inlaid metal work.

1801 What knowledge they [ladies] have gotten, stands out, as it were, above the very surface of their minds, like the appliqué of the embroiderer, instead of having been interwoven with the growth of the piece, so as to have become a part of the stuff: H. MORE, Wks., Vol. VIII. p. 61.

appoggiatura, sb.: It.: Mus.: lit. 'prop, stay, support', a comparatively short accented grace-note prefixed to a note of an air, written as if it were a note over and above the true rhythm of the bar, but rendered in a time deducted from the time allowed for the note to which it is prefixed.

1753 Appoggiatura is commonly marked by a smaller kind of note: CHAMBERS, Cycl., Suppl. 1776 For though I was at too great a distance to judge of your method of taking Appoggiatura: J. COLLIER, Mus. Trav., p. 70. 1830 A famous violin player having executed a concerto, during which, he produced some appoggiaturi and shakes, that astonished many of his hearers: E. BLAQUIERE, Tr. Sig. Pananti, p. 267 (and Ed.). 1838 Thelwall discovered in Milton an appoggiatura or syllable more than is wanted in the bar: GUEST, Eng. Rhythms, p. 175 (1882). 1848 The Appoggiatura...is a small note placed before a large one. There are two sorts of Appoggiatura, one called the short, and one called the long: RIMBAULT, Pianoforte, p. 59. 1886 I should say that one or more syllables have suffered elision or slurring, the appoggiatura of music: MAYOR, Eng. Metre, iv. p. 53.

1612 because I am destitute of other appoggio [sic], I have resolved to take sanctuary in the church: DUDLEY CARLETON, in Court & Times of Jas. I., Vol. I. p. 182 (1848). 1616 I perceive he hath little appoggio to the main pillar that now stands upright: J. CHAMBERLAIN, ib., p. 410.

apprentissage ( = 1 - ), sb.: Eng. fr. Fr. apprentissage: apprenticeship. The Eng. apprenticeage may have been suggested by apprentissage, but is fr. Eng. apprentice.

1692 to be utterly without apprenticeship of war: BACON, Observ. Libel. [T.] 1603 in some inferior arts there is required apprenticeship: HOLLAND, Tr. Plat. Mor., p. 8a. — and nothing at all esteeming that beggerly prudence which is gotten from other by way of apprenticeship: ib., p. 569.

approbative ( = 1 - ), adj.: Eng. fr. Fr. approbatif, fem. -ive: involving or comprising in itself approval, expressive of approval, approving.

1611 Approbatif, Approbative, approving: COTGR.

approbator ( $\angle = \angle =$ ), sb.: Eng. fr. Lat. approbator, noun of agent to approbare, = 'to approve': one who expresses approval.

1665 And so others may not think it dishonour to...accept them for judges and approbators: EVELYN, Corresp., Vol. III. p. 162 (1872).

appropriator ( $\angle = \angle =$ ), sb.: Eng.: one who takes to himself, makes his own; esp. a corporation which, having, or having had, a religious character, enjoys the main emoluments of a benefice; also for impropriator (q. v.).

1765 a vicar has generally an appropriator over him, entitled to the best part of the profits, to whom he is in fact perpetual curate, with a standing salary: BLACKSTONE, Commentaries, Bk. I. ch. xi. p. 388. 1848 He knew very well he was the proprietor or appropriator of the money: THACKERAY, Van. Fair, Vol. II. ch. ix. p. 94 (1879).

approximator ( $\angle = \angle =$ ), sb.: Eng.: one who comes near to.

1858 Canonico Bains, the closest approximator, in modern times, to Palestrina: C.D.L. WISEMAN, 4 Last Popes, 346. [N. E. D.]

[For approximator, fr. Eng. vb. approximate, as if noun of agent to Late Lat. approximare, = 'to come into proximity', 'to come close'.]

1601 there would be staves and appuis set to it, whereupon it may take hold: HOLLAND, Tr. Plin. N. H., Bk. 17, ch. 23, Vol. I. p. 538. 1603 giving covertly thereby to understand that the Sunne hath need of an appuy or supporter to rest upon and to strengthen him: — Tr. Plut. Mor., p. 1308.

2. Mil. defensive support; see point d'appui.

1816 C. JAMES, Mil. Dict. 1852 this column was stopped at the village of Hohenlinden, which was the appui of Ney's left: Tr. Bourrienne's Mem., N. Bonaparte, ch. xvi. p. 212.

3. Horsemanship, the feeling of the tension of the reins between hand and bit, the stay of the horse upon the hand.

1738 Appui, in the manage...is the reciprocal effort between the horse's mouth and the bridle-hand; or the sense of the action of the bridle on the hand of the horseman: CHAMBERS, Cycl. 1816 C. JAMES, Mil. Dict.

après, adv.: Fr.: afterwards, after; après?, = 'what then?', 'what next?'

1850 "Après?" asked Pen, in a great state of excitement: THACKERAY, Pendennis, Vol. II. ch. xvi. p. 194 (1879). 1854 The accursed après has chased me like a remorse, and when black has come up I have wished myself converted to red: — Newcomes, Vol. I. ch. xxviii. p. 307 (1879).

1887 Those who expect details...of the fashionable cure will be disappointed in 'The Massage Case.' The name has probably been affixed to the book après coup, so to speak, and to allure the unwary reader: Athenæum, June 18, p. 796/3.

après moi le déluge, phr.: Fr.: 'after me the deluge'. An expression attributed to Madame de Pompadour, meaning 'so long as my desires are satisfied, I care not if universal ruin befall when I am out of the way'. Prince Metternich used the phrase with the implication that when he ceased to influence affairs, confusion must ensue. The phrase has been compared to a fragment of Greek tragedy quoted by Suetonius, ἐποὶ θανόντος γαῖα μυχθήτω πυρί, 'when I am dead, let earth be mingled with fire'.

1851 N. & O., 1st Ser., Vol. III. p. 299. 1887 Each man believes that the new house will last his time—Après moi le déluge, with a vengeance! J. BALL, Notes of a Naturalist in S. Amer., ch. iii. p. 122.

D.] 1885 Next year there will probably be an exhibition of foreign aquarelles: Athenaeum, Aug. 1, p. 152/3. 1887 The artists of the Continent have directed their attention to water colour... Already the French, Belgian, and Dutch aquarellistes have invaded our islands: ib., May 14, p. 645/1. 1887 Many of the Dutch aquarellistes appear to like that softness...which perhaps originally came into landscape painting with Constable: Daily News, Oct. 22, p. 6/5.

*aquarium, sb.: Lat. neut. of adj. aquarius, = 'pertaining to water': a vessel, or tank, or a collection of tanks, generally for the reception of live aquatic animals and plants, made entirely or partially of glass to facilitate observation of the contents; also a place of entertainment in which an aquarium is a prominent feature. The word replaced marine vivarium, aquatic v., see vivarium.

1855 At home in the aquarium, he will make a very different figure: C. KINGSLEY, Glaucus, p. 69. — One great object of interest in the book is the last chapter, which treats fully of the making and stocking of these salt-water "Aquaria": ib., p. 142. 1856 Collections of objects that inhabit rivers and lakes are of course called Fresh-water aquaria; those that owe their origin to the sea are called Marine aquaria: S. HIBBERD, Fresh-Water Aquarium, ch. i. p. 6. bef. 1863 People...won't have their mouths stopped by cards, or ever so much microscopes and aquariums: THACKERAY, Roundabout Papers, p. 118 (1879). 1878 a live whale for the Westminster aquarium: Lloyd's Whly., May 19, p. 5/3. [St.] 1881 The fish confined within circumscribed limits of pond or aquarium, are never 'at home': HEATH, Garden Wild, Pref., p. 9.

Aquarius: Lat.: lit. 'water-carrier': the eleventh of the twelve zodiacal constellations, now the eleventh division of the ecliptic, which the Sun enters Jan. 21, and which does not now coincide with the constellation Aquarius. Anglicised 15 c.—17 c. as Aquary.

I. ch. xxiv. p. 330 (7th Ed.). bef. 1658 Thus fixt, they drink until their Noses shine, | A Constellation in this Watry Sign, | Which they Aquarius call: J. CLEVELAND, Wks., p. 292 (1687). 1726 Now when... Aquarius stains the inverted year: THOMSON, Seasons, Winter, 43.

*aquatint(a), sb.: Eng. fr. It. acqua tinta: a kind of engraving or etching on copper which gives the appearance of drawing in Indian ink, sepia, or water colors. The design is worked on a resinous film, which is then carefully varnished, and the exposed metal is bitten by solutions of nitric acid. Also used attrib.

1782 I do not myself thoroughly understand the process of working in aquatinta; but the great inconvenience of it seems to arise from its not being sufficiently under the artist's command...the aqua-tinta method of multiplying drawings hath some inconveniences: W. GILPIN, Observ. Wye, p. viii. (1800). 1797 AQUA-TINTA, a method of etching on copper, lately invented, by which a soft and beautiful effect is produced, resembling a fine drawing in water colours or Indian ink: Encyc. Brit. 1807 Such as the prints are, we certainly do not admire them the more for their confused aquatinta execution: Edin. Rev., Vol. 10, p. 111. 1862 Published in aqua-tinta, in imitation of bistre or India-ink drawings: THORNBURY, Turner, Vol. I. p. 79.

R. LOWELL, Biglow Papers, No. ix. (Halifax). 1874 I always thought I should like Arcadia...These ingenuous ways appeal to my better nature. I wish I had a shepherd's crook with a blue ribbon on it: B. W. HOWARD, One Summer, ch. xiv. p. 205 (1883).

*arcānum, pl. arcāna, s.b.: neut. of Lat. adj. arcānus, = 'hidden', 'secret': a secret, a mystery; a supposed great secret of nature; a marvellous remedy. In the 17, 18 cc. the s of the Eng. plural was sometimes added to the Latin plural.

1495 Archa is a vessell and mesure onely in the whyche thynges ben put & kepte out of syghte that they ben not seen of alle men / of that name comyth this worde Archanum pryuetee that is waarly kept unknown to multytude of men: GLANVIL, De Propr. Rerum, Bk. xix. ch. cxxviii. p. 933. 1586 Nowe if you leaue him not there, but do purifie him more, then doth his tincture appeare; and if you can purge him thoroughly and perfectly then shall you haue his Archanum, & so of others: I. W., Letter, sig. B viii v. 1615 If Cornelius Agrippa were again to compile his book, De Beneficiis, I doubt not but he might have from her magicians such arcana to increase and recommend it, that the Bohemian ladies would more value him than to suffer him, as they did, to die like a poor beggarly knave: J. CASTLE, in Court & Times of Jas. I., Vol. i. p. 380 (1848). 1616 the Arcana | Of Ladies Cabinets: B. JONSON, Dev. is an Ase, iv. 4, Wks., Vol. ii. p. 150 (1631-40). 1620 the greatest Politicians...are not able to penetrate the profundity of the Arcana of the Papacy: BRENT, Tr. Soave's Hist. Council Trent, p. lxxvii. (1676). 1650 this blood is the balsome of balsomes, and is called the Archanum of blood, and it is so wonderful, and of such great vertue: JOHN FRENCH, Tr. Paracelsus' Nature of Things, Bk. iii. p. 21. 1652 the Arcana of Religion, and the great mysteries of Codlinesse: N. CULVERWEL, Light of Nat. Treat., p. 190. 1652 He told us stories of a Genoese jeweller, who had the great arcānum: EVELYN, Diary, Vol. i. p. 286 (1872). 1668 the revealing of Arcanums or secrets in Medicines: J. H., Eliz. Prof., p. 2. 1678 this was one Grand Archanum of the Orphick Cabala, and the ancient Greekish Theology, That God is All things: CUDWORTH, Intell. Syst., Bk. i. ch. iv. p. 306. 1699 The very Archanum of pretending Religion in all Wars is, That something may be found out in which all men may have interest: SELDEN, Table-Talk, p. 105 (1868). 1702 Here is some gradual refection of the veiled arcana of the Divine Being: JOHN HOWE, Wks., p. 93/2 (1834). 1710 Viper Powder Compound...is held for a great Arcanum, against the Jaundise: FULLER, Pharmacop., p. 396. 1748 I will...let you into certain Arcana: LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, Vol. i.

No. cxxix. p. 303 (1774). 1768. There have you gone and told my arcanum arcanorum ['of secrets'] to that leaky mortal Palgrave [Gray]: GRAY and MASON, Corresp., p. 425 (1853). 1788 Let us...like Oedipus, attempt to break the spell of dark mystery, of secret nostrums, and poisonous arcana: J. LETTISON, in Gent. Mag., LVIII. i. 98/a. 1810 an habitual and excessive attention to those arcana of etymology: Edin. Rev., Vol. 17, p. 198. 1822—3 promising unbounded wealth to whomsoever might choose to furnish the small preliminary sum necessary to change egg-shells into the great arcanum: SCOTT, Pev. Peak, ch. xxvii. p. 324 (1886). 1840 Mrs. Simpkinson preferred a short sejour in the still-room with Mrs. Botherby, who had promised to initiate her in that grand arcanum, the transmutation of gooseberry jam into Guava jelly: BARNHAM, Ingolds. Leg., p. 7 (1865). 1856 translate and send to Bentley the arcanum bribed and bullied away from shuddering Brahmins: EMERSON, English Traits, viii. Wks., Vol. II. p. 59 (Bohn, 1866).

abt. 1630 and I have been a little curious in the search thereof, though I have not to doe with the Arcana Imperii: (1653) R. NAUNTON, Fragm. Reg., p. 36 (1870). 1646 had imparted his desseins, and infus'd all his maxims into him, and open'd unto him all the Arcana Imperii: HOWELL, Lewis XIII., p. 135. 1649 The articles of confession and absolving sinners, being a greater arcanum imperii for governing the world than all the arts invented by statistes formerly were: LORD HERBERT OF CHERBURY, Hen. VIII., p. 109 (1886). 1662 The kings of Israel had some one courtier...to whom they imparted arcana imperii, state-secrets: JOHN TRAPP, Com., Vol. 1, p. 68/a (1867). 1675 our great Law-giver disdaining to vie the Arcana of his Empire, with any State-maxims, but the very best: J. SMITH, Christ. Relig. Appeal, Bk. 1. ch. iv. § 1, p. 12. 1681 Those that search into mysteries of state, and would know arcana imperii, think they are wise men: TH. GOODWIN, Wks., in Nichol's Ser. Stand. Divines, Vol. 1, p. 139 (1861). 1701 these are arcana imperii—state secrets, indeed, which we are not to search into: ABP. LEIGHTON, Exp. 10 Commandments, Wks., p. 620/2 (1844). 1768 Force is the grand arcanum imperii: JUNIUS, Letters, Vol. II. p. 260 (1887).

archaeus, archēus, sb.: Late Lat. fr. Gk. ἀρχαῖος, 'original', 'ancient': a term applied by Paracelsus and others to the principle which was supposed to regulate and maintain animal and vegetable life; by a sort of personification, supposed to reside in individual organs; also see quot. from Bailey.

1641 Now in this center is the Archaeus, the servant of nature, which mixing those spermes together sends them abroad, and by distillation sublimates them by the heat of a continual motion unto the superficies of the earth: JOHN FRENCH, Art Distill., Bk. vi. p. 169 (1651). 1650 The first sort of them Man signs: the second, the Archæus: — Tr. Paracelsus' Nature of Things, Bk. ix. p. 101. 1657 the main scope and principall intention being, first to rectifie the Archæus of the inner Man, that it may attract health from the heavenly Iliaster: H. PINNELL, Philos. Ref., sig. A 3 v. 1678 Lastly, as the Latter Platonists and Peripateticks have unanimously followed their Masters herein, whose Vegetative Soul also is no other than a Plastick Nature; so the Chymists and Paracelsians insist much upon the same thing, and seem rather to have carried the Notion on further, in the Bodies of Animals, where they call it by a new name of their own, the Archæus: CUDWORTH, Intell. Syst., Bk. 1. ch. iii. p. 153. 1721 ARCHEUS, [among Chymists] the highest and most exalted Spirit that can be separated from mixed Bodies: BAILEY. 1762 [See alkahest]. 1818 their 'Archæus', or universal spirit: LADY MORGAN, Fl. Macarthy, Vol. III. ch. ii. p. 85 (1819).

1820 we observed this Archididascalos seated in a large arm-chair...surrounded by a very large audience both of priests and laymen: T. S. HUGHES, Trav. in Sicily, Vol. 1. ch. x. p. 301. 1821 it was a constant matter of triumph to us, the learned triumvirate of the first form, to see our 'Archididascalos' (as he loved to be called) conning our lesson before we went up: Confess. of an Eng. Opium-Eater, Pt. 1. p. 18 (1823). 1865 Two masters styled respectively Archididascalus and Hypodidascalus: STAUNTON, Gl. Sch. Eng., Westm., ii. 133. [N.E.D.]

[The prefix archi-, 'chief', is generally Lat. fr. Gk. ἀρχι-, ἀρχε-, 'chief', 'original', cf. ἀρχή, 'beginning', 'rule', 'rule', 'chief'. From Lat. archi-, arche-, arch- (bef. a vowel) comes through Old French the Eng. arch. In Classical Gk. the form ἀρχε- only means 'ruling', 'leading', so that ἀρχέντιον ought to have been ἀρχίντιον and archetype to have been architype.]

Archidoxa, sb. pl.: neut. of quasi-Gk. adj. ἀρχιδόξος, 'of chief fame' (on analogy of εὐδόξος, 'of good fame'): (secrets) of chief fame. Paracelsus wrote Archidoxorum libri X, 'Ten Books of Archidoxa'. From the abl. in such phrases as 'in the Archidoxis' (1650, John French, Tr. Paracelsus' Nature of Things, Bk. v. p. 46; ib., Bk. VIII. p. 80), and the Anglicised (or Gallicised) form Archidoxes (1642, Sir Th. Brown, Relig. Med., 45, Ed. 1682), sprang a wrongly-formed quasi-Lat. nom. sing. Archidoxis, found, e.g., on the running headings of the Geneva Ed. of Paracelsus' Wks., 1658, not in the 1570 Ed. of the Archidoxa.

Archimago, Archimagus, sb.: quasi-It. or quasi-Lat., perhaps a Lat. transliteration of Late Gk. ἀρχιμαγος, 'chief of the Magi': a chief magician; see Magi. The name of Spenser's personification of hypocrisy, "the Enchanter", F. Q., Bk. II. Canto i.

1553—57 The archimagus espieing his time, compleineth unto the king: FOXE, A. & M., 88/a (1596). [N.E.D.] bef. 1670 An Evil befell that Archimago, that Fiend of Mischief, that set variance between the Head and the Body: J. HACKET, Abp. Williams, Pt. 1. 95, p. 81 (1693). 1678 and that this Apollonius was but an Archimago or grand Magician: CUDWORTH, Intell. Syst., Bk. 1. ch. iv. p. 267.

*archimandrite (ㄨ ㄣ ㄣ), sb.: Eng. fr. Mod. Gk. ἀρχιμανδρίτης, perhaps sometimes through Lat. archimandrita: the superior of a monastery (μάνδρα) pertaining to the Greek Church; also a superior over several monasteries, a superior abbot. In English the ch of archi- is pronounced as k.

1662 In their Monasteries they have Archimandrites, Kilari's, and Igu-menit's, who are their Abbots, Priors, and Guardians: J. DAVIES, Ambassadors Trav., Bk. III. p. 104 (1669).

Archimēdes, a celebrated Greek philosopher and mathematician of Syracuse; see eureka. Hence adj. Archimede-an. Archimede-an Screw, an invention for raising water by the revolution of a spiral tube about a slanting axis.

*archipelago, sb.: It. arcipelago, archipelagus (quasi-Lat.): a chief sea (Lat. pelagus). For archi-, 'chief', see archididascalos. The It. arci- was prob. for Egeo- in the name Egeopelago, and is wrongly sounded in Eng. as arki-.

argūmenti causā, a. grātiā, phr.: Lat.: for the sake of argument.

1846 It is here presumed, argūmenti causā, that such a disposition of our troops would have been possible: North Brit. Rev., May, p. 264 note. 1826 Give to our adversaries, argūmenti grātiā, the benefit of the suggestion: Congress. Debates, Vol. II. Pt. I. p. 280. 1828 Admitting, argūmenti grātiā, the equal claim with these officers...is that an answer to the claim of the former? ib., Vol. IV. Pt. I. p. 211.

argūmentum ab inconvenienti, phr.: Lat.: 'argument from inconvenience', an argument from expediency which ignores higher considerations.

1826 What, Sir, is this argumentum ab inconvenienti which induces us not to look at the charter of our powers: Congress. Debates, Vol. II. Pt. I. p. 97. 1888 The Court...were strongly impressed with the argument ab inconvenienti: Law Times, Mar. 17, p. 347/1.

*argūmentum ad absurdum, phr.: Lat.: argument (leading) to an absurd conclusion, used to demonstrate the truth of a proposition by assuming it to be untrue and showing that this assumption leads to an absurdity. See reductio ad absurdum.

*argūmentum ad crumēnam, phr.: Lat.: argument (addressed) to the purse.

1759 I do therefore, by these presents, strictly order and command, That it be known and distinguished by the name and title of the Argumentum Pistulatorium, and no other; — and that it rank hereafter with the Argumentum Baculinum and the Argumentum ad Crumenam, and for ever hereafter be treated of in the same chapter: STERNE, Trist. Shand., i. xxi. Wks., p. 53 (1839).

argūmentum ad hoc, phr.: Lat.: an argument (applicable) to a particular case (lit. 'to this'). Also ad hoc means 'for this' (particular purpose).

*argūmentum ad hominem, phr.: Lat.: argument to the person; see ad hominem.

1690 To press a Man with Consequences drawn from his own Principles, or Concessions... is already known under the Name of Argumentum ad Hominem: LOCKE, Hum. Und., iv. xvii. 391 (1693). 1754 The Frenchman, finding himself puzzled by the learning of his antagonist, had recourse to the argumentum ad hominem: SMOLLETT, Ferd. Ct. Fathom, ch. xlii. Wks., Vol. iv. p. 227 (1817). 1759 But it was the Argumentum ad hominem: STERNE, Trist. Shand., ii. x. Wks., p. 77 (1839). 1804 The refutation, by means of this argumentum ad hominem, wears the appearance of captiousness and ill-temper: Edin. Rev., Vol. 4. p. 349. 1808 Unhappily, such argumenta [pl.] ad hominem are too commonly introduced in discussing great state questions: ib., Vol. 11. p. 486. 1820 We have a considerable contempt for the argumentum ad hominem in any case: ib., Vol. 33. p. 426. 1826 I most successfully used the argumentum ad hominem in this instance: Refl. on a Ramble to Germany, p. 221. 1860 I closed the conversation with an argumentum ad hominem: Once a Week, Oct. 27, p. 496/1.

argūmentum ad rem, phr.: Lat.: 'argument to the purpose', a real, relevant argument.

1759 and the Argumentum ad Rem, which, contrariwise, is made use of by the man only against the woman: STERNE, Trist. Shand., i. xxi. Wks., p. 53 (1839).

argūmentum baculinum, a. bacilinum, phr.: Late Lat.: facetious, 'argument with a stick', settlement of a dispute by beating the opponent.

1675 J. BRAMHALL, Wks., p. 676 (1677). 1711 When our Universities found that there was no End of Wrangling this Way, they invented a kind of Argument, which is not reducible to any Mood or Figure in Aristotle. It was called the Argumentum Baculinum (others write it Bacilinum or Baculinum) which is pretty well express'd in our English Word Club-Law: Spectator, No. 230, Dec. 4. p. 341/2 (Morley). 1756 The Mode of Reasoning I mean, is the Argumentum Baculinum: Gray's Inn Journal, Vol. II. p. 270. 1759 [See argumentum ad crumenam]. 1815 The argumentum baculinum was manfully resorted to, and as vigorously repelled: Scribbleomania, q. 1884 There the argumentum baculinum was applied, of which pecuniary damages are but an inadequate refutation: Sat. Rev., May 24, p. 673/2.

Argus: Gk. Ἄργος: (a) a mythical creature with a hundred eyes, of which only two closed at a time, set by Hēra (Jūno) to watch her rival Io whom Zeus (Jūpiter) had changed into a heifer; but Hermes (Mercury) having charmed Argus to sleep and slain him, Hēra turned him into a peacock with his eyes in the tail. Hence (b) an Argus is a watchful guardian or spy. In Combin. (c) Argus-eyed, Argus-like, = 'watchful', and in Zool. Argus = 'oculated', 'ocellated'.

arsis, sb.: Lat. fr. Gk. ἀρσις, = 'a lifting'.

In Greek orchestric rhythm the arsis answered to the raising of the foot, the thesis (g. v.) to the lowering of the foot and its stay on the ground. Some of the Greek metrists transferred the words from the human foot to the voice and so confused the arsis with the metrical accent or ictus (g. v.) of a verse foot which caused a raising of the voice; these have been followed by Latin metrists and most modern scholars, e.g. Bentley and Hermann. The metrical ictus or arsis is further confused with stress (see accent 2) in modern times.

1830 After the example of Bentley, we call that time in which the ictus is, the arsis, and those times, which are without the ictus, the thesis: J. SEAGER, Tr. Hermann's Metres, Bk. 1. ch. ii. p. 4. 1833 [See anacrusis.]

2. Music. descent of voice from higher to lower pitch. See per arsin. In old Gk. music an arsis corresponded to the accented part of a bar.

atole, sô.: Sp. fr. Mexican atolli. See quotations.

1676 Mr. Gage in his Survey of the West-Indies commends a drink they there call Atolle: J. WORLIDGE, Cider, p. 184 (1691). 1847 These workers spend the greater part of their time under ground, living on "atole", a dilute kind of corn mush: Reconnaissance fr. Fort Leavenworth, p. 452 (1848). 1854 Atole, a composition of pounded parched corn, cocoa, and sugar, which mixed with water was almost his living: J. STEPHENS, Centr. Amer., p. 367.

atoll(on), sô.: Native Maldivian atolu: a ring-shaped reef or island of coral, such as the Maldivian islands, enclosing a lagoon which according to Darwin (Structure... of Coral Reefs, 1842) is the site of a submerged island (not of coral).

1625 each of these Atollons are incircled round with a huge ledge of Rocks. The Atollons are all after a sort circular or oval... Being in the midst of an Atollon, you shall see about you a great ledge of Rocks which impale and defend the Isles, against the impetuosity of the Sea: PURCHAS, Pilgrims, Vol. II. Bk. ix. p. 1648. 1845 three great classes of coral-reefs: namely, Atolls, Barrier, and Fringing-reefs: C. DARWIN, Journ. Beagle, ch. xx. p. 465. 1883 The little shoal, since the chart was laid down, had become an atoll with its reef and its lagoon: W. BESANT, Captain's Room, &c., I. p. 250.

atom (ἄτομος), sô.: Eng. fr. Fr. atome, or direct fr. Lat. atomus, pl. atomi, acc. atomos, often found in 16 c. to 18 c.; hence, pl. atomies, whence sing. atomy. Lat. atomus, 'an atom', the twinkling of an eye', is fr. Gk. fem. ἀτομος (sc. οὐσία), fr. adj. ἀτομος, = 'indivisible'.

1. in ancient philosophy, one of the ultimate particles of matter by the concurrence of which, according to Democritus and Epicurus, the universe was formed. They were supposed to be absolutely indivisible.

1477 Resolving in Atomes [MSS. atomis, atomes, attons]: NORTON, Ord. Alch. (in Ashm., 1652), v. 79. [N. E. D.] 1546 Epicurus one of Democritus dyciples putteth two Causes Atomos or motes and Vacuitie or Emptiness; of these he saith the four Elements come: LANGLEY, Pol. Verg. De Invent., I. ii. 4b. [ib.] 1603 As for example, set case that one doe thinke that the little motes and indivisible bodies called Atomi, together with voidnesse and emptinesse be the first elements and principles whereof all things are made: HOLLAND, Tr. Plut. Mor., p. 260. — and is it probable that your Atomes doe glide, divide, and decline, neither before nor after: ib., p. 1190. bef. 1658 Democritus... thought the World to be compos'd of Atoms: J. CLEVELAND, Wks., p. 100 (1687). 1663 Deep sighted in Intelligences, Ideas, Atomes, Influences: S. BUTLER, Hudibras, Pt. I. Cant. i. p. 41. 1691 they say the Atomes decline: J. RAY, Creation, Pt. I. p. 36 (1701).

2. a mote, a particle of dust seen in a sunbeam.

1695 And thicker then in sunne are Atomies | Flew Bullets: G. MARKHAM, Trag. Sir R. Grenville, p. 70 (1671). 1600 It is as easy to count atomies as to resolve the propositions of a lover: SHAKS., As Y. L. It, III. 2, 245. 1603 I'd hurle his panting braine about the ayre | In mites, as small as atomi: B. JONSON, Sef., I. 1, Wks., p. 366 (1616). 1609 those indivisible little bodies or motes flying up and downe in the ayre, such as we call Atomi: HOLLAND, Tr. Marc., Bk. XXVI. ch. I. p. 283. bef. 1670 No Scale is the heavier for Atoms that fly about it: J. HACKET, Adp. Williams, Pt. II. 40, p. 37 (1693).

1630 From this small Atom [hempseed], mighty matters springs: JOHN TAYLOR, Wks., sig. 2 Fff 3rd/2. bef. 1631 must either mist, or nothing be | Who are at home but with mere Atomi: J. DONNE, Poems, p. 182 (1669). 1640 mist—whose muddy atomies 'fore the wind do fly: H. MORE, Psych., II. iii. 27, p. 120 (1647). 1663 She shall cut an Atome sooner than divide us: DRYDEN, Wild Gallant, II. Wks., Vol. I. p. 39 (1701). 1820 its tower was this same year struck by lightning, and falling down crushed fourteen persons to atoms under the ruins: T. S. HUGHES, Trav. in Sicily, Vol. II. ch. I. p. 18.

1591 Drawn with a team of little atomies | Athwart men's noses: SHAKS., Rom., I. 4, 57.

3. the smallest division of time in the Middle Ages,  $\frac{1}{72}$  of a minute.

1398 an houre [contains] foure poyntes. And a poynt .x. momentes/And a moment twelue vnces/And an vnce seuen and forty atomos And atomus is noo ferdor departed for his shortnesse: TREvisa, Tr. Barth. De P. R., IX. ix. abt. 1533 of amos [des atomos] ben made the momentes, of momentes ben made the mynutes, of mynutes made the degrees, of degrees the quarters of hours: DU WES, in Introd. Doc. Ind., p. 1078 (Paris, 1852). — than Atomos is without diuision: ib., p. 1079.

4. in modern philosophy, an ultimate particle of matter, which is supposed to be always physically indivisible, but not absolutely indivisible by metaphysical analysis.

1640 So must sleight Atoms be sole parts of quantitie: H. MORE, Psych., I. ii. 56, p. 94 (1647). 1658 the piercing Atomes of Air: SIR TH. BROWN, Hypnotaph., ch. III. p. 10 (1686). 1784 [Philosophy] now | Measures an atom, and now girds a world: COWPER, Task, I. Poems, Vol. II. p. 28 (1808). 1875 Atom is a body which cannot be cut in two. The atomic theory is a theory of the constitution of bodies which asserts that they are made up of atoms: J. C. MAXWELL, in Encyc. Brit., Vol. III. p. 36 (9th Ed.).

5. in Modern Chemistry, one of the smallest particles in which the elements combine, i.e. the smallest known quantity of any element: the atom of chemical compounds is the smallest quantity in which a group of elementary atoms combines, that is, the smallest known quantity of a chemical compound.

1874 All bodies are composed of ultimate atoms, the weight of which is different in different kinds of matter: H. LONSDALE, John Dalton, ix. 165.

6. extended uses; see quotation.

abt. 1533 Ye shall note, that atmos [Gk. ἀτμος] is a thyng so lytell that can nat be devyded, as a letter whiche is atmos, in grammer, out, is atmos in arismetrie, a pricke is atmos in geometry: DU WES, in Introd. Doc. Ind., p. 1079 (Paris, 1852).

NASHE, Christ's Teares, Wks., iv. 206 (Grosart). 1610 Aurum potabile being | The onely medicine for the ciuill Magistrate: B. JONSON, Alch., iii. 1, Wks., p. 636 (1616). 1646 this is that the Chymists mainly drive at in the attempt of their Aurum Potabile: SIR TH. BROWN, Pseud. Ep., Bk. iii. ch. xxii. p. 130 (1686). 1653 Monsieur Roupel sent me a small phial of his aurum potabile: EVELYN, Diary, Vol. i. p. 298 (1872). 1662 Only the king had aurum potabile, a golden water prepared, which he and his eldest son alone might drink: JOHN TRAPP, Com., Vol. ii. p. 117/1 (1867). 1721 AURUM POTABILE...Gold made liquid, so as to be drinkable: BAILEY.

auspex, pl. auspices, sb.: Lat.: one who observed the flight of birds, a kind of augur in Ancient Rome.

1598 Shee should heare the words of the Auspices or hand-fasters: GREENWEY, Tacitus' Ann., 151 (1604). [N. E. D.] abt. 1609 In the midst went the Auspices; after them, two that sung: B. JONSON, Masques, Wks., p. 553/1 (1860). 1652 It makes the Auspex watch the birds in their several postures: N. CULVERWEL, Light of Nature, ch. xiii. p. 135.

auspicator, sb.: Eng., as if noun of agent to Lat. auspicari, 'to take omens': an auspex or augur.

1652 the Pullarian Auspicator would needs be presaging clean contrary to his tokens: J. GAULE, Mag-astro-mancer, p. 330.

auspice ( $\cup \cup$ ), sb.: Eng. fr. Fr. auspice, fr. Lat. auspicium (q. v.).

1. an observation of the flight of birds by an auspex or augur for purposes of divination; hence, an omen, a presage, esp. of a happy import.

1600 Whiles the Generall was occupied hereabout, there arose some warbling amongst the chicken-masters touching the auspice or presage of that day: HOLLAND, Tr. Livy, Bk. x. ch. xi. p. 382. 1601 (martins) are of great account in Auspices, and presage good: — Tr. Phil. N. H., Bk. 20, ch. 18, Vol. i. p. 298. 1796 This auspice (the publication of a pamphlet) was instantly followed by a speech from the throne, in the very spirit of that pamphlet: BURKE, Regic. Peace, iii. Wks., viii. 327. [N. E. D.]

2. since magistrates began their office with auspice in Ancient Rome, the Lat. word came to mean 'chief command'; hence, auspice has come to mean 'beneficial influence', 'successful direction', 'patronage'.

bef. 1637 It [the armada] was so great, | Yet by the auspice of Eliza beat: B. JONSON, Masques at Court, [C. E. D.] 1667 that Town... Which by his Auspice they will nobler make: DRYDEN, Ann. Mirab., 289, p. 73. 1855 the home of marine zoology and botany in England, as the Firth of Forth, under the auspices of Sir John Dalzell, has been for Scotland: C. KINGSLEY, Glaucus, p. 54.

auspicium, pl. auspicia, sb.: Lat.: an observation made by an auspex or augur for purposes of divination, without which no important public business was begun in Ancient Rome.

1600 the Dictator...went back to Rome to take the Auspicium: HOLLAND, Tr. Livy, Bk. viii. p. 302. 1609 the Auspicia either distracted them or prohibited them to encounter: — Tr. Marc., Bk. xiv. ch. ix. p. 22.

abt. 1374 Yif pe cloudy wynde auster blow felliche: CHAUCER, Tr. Boethius, Bk. ii. p. 39 (1868). 1506 The radiant bryghtnes, of golden Phebus | Auster gan couer, wyth cloudes tenebrus: HAWES, Past. Ples., sig. B ii<sup>o</sup>. 1590 Auster and Aquilon with winged steeds, | All sweating, tilt about the watery heavens: MARLOWE, I Tamburl., iii. 2 (1592), p. 21/1 (1858). 1603 Auster and Boreas iousting furiously | Under bot Cancer, make two Clouds to clash: J. SYLVESTER, Tr. Du Bartas, p. 15 (1608). 1640 Auster arose | With blustering rage: H. MORRIS, Phil. Po., l. 52, p. 14 (1647). 1748 Where nought but putrid steams and noisome fogs | For ever hung on drizzly Auster's beard: J. THOMSON, Castle of Indolence, ii. lxxviii. r. 245 (1834).

aut Caesar aut nullus (or nihil), phr.: Lat.: 'either a Caesar or a nobody' (or 'nothing'), either extreme success or utter failure. The phrase is said to have been used by Julius Caesar, the great Roman Dictator, when young, just before a critical election. He meant "(I shall be) successful to an extent worthy of me, Caesar, or a corpse". The significance subsequently attached to his family name, Caesar, has modified the meaning of the phrase.

[1649 he would saie to hym, eyther a Cæsar or nothing: W. THOMAS, Hist. Ital., fol. 69<sup>vo</sup>.] 1614 But the worst is, things are come to that point, that we must now be Cæsar aut nihil; and yet, if the best come that can be expected, I doubt we shall find that we are not so much risen as the place fallen: J. CHAMBERLAIN, in Court & Times of Jas. I., Vol. i. p. 301 (1848). 1633 Aut Cæsar, aut nihil, the king he must be, or nothing: T. ADAMS, Com., p. 833/2 (1865). 1647 Aut Cæsar aut nullus as he said to his mother: JOHN TRAPP, Com. New Test., p. 141/2 (1868). 1660 Now or never. If you let slip your hold you are undone—aut Cæsar aut Nullus: J. TATHAM, Rump, Wks., p. 208 (1879). 1811 There is in the boy a character of 'aut Cæsar aut nullus': L. M. HAWKINS, Countess, Vol. i. p. 222 (2nd Ed.). 1813 BYRON, in Moore's Life, Vol. ii. p. 272 (1832). 1886 Those who insist that for a public school boy it [classical education] must be aut Cæsar aut nihil must be held responsible for that intellectual vacuity which has too often survived... a public school training: Athenaeum, July 17, p. 79/3.

autarky ( $\cup \cup$ ), -chie, -chy, αὐτάρκεια, sb.: Eng. fr. Gk., or Gk.; self-sufficiency. The h is wrong, but perhaps intended to keep c hard.

abt. 1643 Autarchie or self sufficiency: Maximes Unfolded, 4. [N. E. D.] 1657 these have an autarky, a self sufficiency, such as godliness is never without: JOHN TRAPP, Com. Old Test., Vol. ii. p. 507/2 (1868). 1660 now the most Quintessential Stoicks find an autarkeia...within their own souls: J. SMITH, Sel. Disc., p. 130 (1673). 1677 every good and virtuous man hath or may attain a sort of autarkeia or self-fulness: J. HOWE, Wks., p. 31/1 (1834). 1701 much of the observance of this precept lies in that autarkeia, that contentedness and satisfaction of mind with our own estate, which will surely keep us from this disordered coveting: ASP. LEIGHTON, Ten Commandments, Prec. x. Wks., p. 642.

1. a drama (by a Spanish or Portuguese author).

1779 Autos and misterios are prohibited on the theatres of Madrid: H. SWINBURNE, Trav. Spain, iii. q. [N. E. D.]

2. for Sp. auto de fé, Port. auto da fé (q. v.).

1563 they brought the said Nicholas Burton, with...other prisoners...into the city of Seville, to a place where the said inquisitors sat in judgment, which they called the Auto, with a canvas coat; whereupon...was painted the huge figure of a devil, tormenting a soul in a flame of fire: FOXE, A. & M., Bk. xii. viii. 514 (1853). bef. 1600 there were that came one hundred mile off, to see the saide Auto (as they call it): R. TOMSON, in R. Hakluyt's Voyages, Vol. iii. p. 451.

1804 who seemed piously to deplore their own inability to refute his heresies in the flames of an auto da fe: Edin. Rev., Vol. 3, p. 383. 1817 My case was supposed to comprise all the crimes which could, and several which could not, be committed; and little less than auto da fe was anticipated as the result: Byron, Wks., Vol. xv. p. 126 note (1833). 1818 Familiars and inquisitors for ministers of state, and *auto da fe*s for national festivals: LADY MORGAN, Fl. MacCarthy, Vol. 1. ch. ii. p. 87 (1819). 1828 Then comes the bigotry—the stake—the auto da fe of scandal: LORD LYTTON, Pelham, ch. xxiii. p. 61 (1859). 1829 Some...were again received into the Christian fold...condemned to heavy penance; others were burnt at auto da fe: W. IRVING, Cong. of Granada, ch. lxvii. p. 373. 1837 those romances on which the curate and barber of Don Quixote's village performed so cruel an auto da fe: MACAULAY, Essays, p. 414 (1877). 1850 Shall we take him to the publisher's, or make an auto da fe of him? THACKERAY, Pendennis, Vol. II. ch. iii. p. 28 (1879). 1888 Nor can it be questioned that autos da fe were spectacles highly popular in Spain: Athenæum, Aug. 4, p. 1543.

*autochthōn, pl. autochthones, -ons, sb.: Gk. αὐτόχθων, pl. αὐτόχθονες, = 'sprung from the land (χθών) itself' (αὐτο), 'of original native stock'.

1. lit. born or made from the soil itself. Rare.

1579 the first inhabitants which occupied the country of ATTICA, the which were called AUTOCHTHONES: NORTH, Tr. Plutarch, p. 2 (1612). 1625 Of which Nations the first, for their Antiquity, vaunted of themselves that they were αὐτόχθονες, and the second, εσποῖκνοι, as if they had been bred immediately of the Earth, or borne before the Moone: PURCHAS, Pilgrims, Vol. 1. Bk. 1. p. 107. 1630 And as the Arcadian, and Attiques in Greece for their immemorial antiquity, are said to vaunt of themselves, that the one are Προσέλκνοι [sic] before the Moon; the other αὐτόχθονες issued of the earth: HOWELL, Epist. Hor. El., Vol. II. bk. p. 364 (1678). 1648 So did the Athenians term themselves αὐτόχθονες or Aborigines, and in testimony thereof did wear a golden Insect on their Heads...There was therefore never any Autochthon, or Man arising from the Earth, but Adam: SIR TH. BROWN, Pseud. Ep., Bk. VI. ch. i. p. 228 (1686).

1590 for there is no mention made that they came out of any other country, but they were called Autochthones, borne of themselves in the lande of Attica: L. LLOYD, Consent of Time, p. 325. 1667 Mizraim, the founder of the Egyptians...who vainly boasted that they were αὐτόχθονες, as ancient as their land: JOHN TRAPP, Com. Old Test., Vol. II. p. 596/2 (1668).

Brit.* 1813 In Captain Dixon's Voyage...frequent mention is made of the intoxicating and injurious effect of a root called Ava...in some of the South Sea Islands: Med. & Phys. Journ., Vol. XXIX. p. 108. 1845 the stream was shaded by the dark green knotted stem of the Ava,—so famous in former days for its powerful intoxicating effects: C. DARWIN, Journ. Beagle, ch. xviii. p. 410.

1. a loosened mass of snow (and ice) descending swiftly down a mountain side, and often carrying with it stones, branches, &c.

1788 The Avalanches stun the thunder: Gent. Mag., LVIII. i. 146/2. 1813 But they are exposed to great danger from the descent of avalanches, or the sudden sliding down of whole fields of snow: Edin. Rev., Vol. II. p. 166. 1816 Till white and thundering down they go, | Like the avalanche's snow | On the Alpine fives below: BYRON, Siege of Cor., xxiv. Wks., Vol. x. p. 136 (1832). 1822 the cup of smoking café au lait stood still in their hand, while waiting in breathless suspense for the next avalanche: L. SIMOND, Switzerland, Vol. 1. p. 237. 1853 the creation of an iceberg by debacle or avalanche: E. K. KANE, 1st Grinnell Exped., ch. viii. p. 57.

2. metaph. and in extended sense, any mass that makes a disastrous descent, a moving mass of white color.

? 1796 I would overwhelm you with an Avalanche of Puns and Conundrums loosened...from the Alps of my Imagination: S. T. COLERIDGE, Unpubl. Letters to Rev. J. P. Estlin, p. 18 (H. A. Bright, 1884). 1822 A dust avalanche destroyed one of these cottages last winter: L. SIMOND, Switzerland, Vol. 1. p. 291. 1886 The bulwarks were lined with the bales, so that she looked like a white avalanche gliding down the river: Athenaeum, Nov. 13, p. 628/2.

avania, avar(r)ia (18 c.), avenia (17 c.), sb.: It. or Port.: an impost levied by a Turkish official, an extortionate (Turkish) exaction. Hence the adj. avanious = 'extortionate', in reference to Turks.

1599 For Avania of the Cady at Birrha, med[lines] 200: R. HAKLUYT, Voyages, Vol. II. l. p. 276. 1612 They also oftentimes make Avenias of them, that is false accusations: In Purchas Pilgrims, Vol. II. Bk. viii. p. 1344. 1616 presently exclaiming as if beaten by the other, complained to the Sansacke: for which Avania they were compelled to part with eight hundred dollars: GEO. SANDYS, Trav., p. 159 (1632). 1703 Their perpetual extortion and Avaria's: MAUNDRELL, Journ. Jerus., 93 (1721). [N. E. D.] 1738 Avaria: CHAMBERS, Cycl.. 1742 Upon the making up of the great avania, I think it was that for recovery of the capitulations, a vast sum was to be raised, as his Relation shews: R. NORTH, Lives of Norths, Vol. II. p. 422 (1826). 1819 Such was their dread of Marco's hostility and power, that, whenever he made a trip to Constantinople, the whole nobility took to their beds, in expectation of some new avania: T. HOPE, Anast., Vol. I. ch. xiii. p. 249 (1820). 1839 Here the Turkish government...exacts no avania, levies no tax: MISS PARDOE, Beauties of the Bosph., p. 82. 1687 Their extravagant Exactions, and Avanious Practices: RYCAUT, Hist. Turks, II. 251. [N. E. D.]

[Properly avania and avaria are quite distinct, the latter (=Fr. averie) meaning 'damage to ship or cargo at sea' (Eng. average): Dozy thinks avaria is from Arab., but Devic and Prof. Robertson Smith doubt this. Avania, on the contrary, is undoubtedly Eastern, fr. Late Gk. ἀβανία, = 'delation', which Langlès thinks is fr. Pers. āwān, = 'a decree of a tribunal' (Langlès, Tr. Sir J. Chardin's Voyages, Vol. I. p. 18).]

1742 But I am not at all concerned lest frequent eulogies (which, by way of avant propos, I must here declare will advance themselves) should make me appear as partial to my subject: R. NORTH, Lives of Norths, Vol. I. Pref., p. xiv. (1826).

avant-courier, sb.: Eng., often supposed to be Fr. It should, if Fr., be avant-coureur, which was Anglicised as vantcurrer (1579 NORTH, Tr. Plut., p. 111, Ed. 1612), vant-courriers, avantcourriours (1600—1603 HOLLAND), avaunt-courier (1605 SHAKS., K. Lear, iii. 2, 5), Avant Currors (bef. 1658 CLEVELAND, Wks., p. 494, Ed. 1687). Instances of the erroneous treatment as French are not given, as it is uncertain if the authors are responsible in the instances at hand.

1670 The Avant Coureurs of the Duke of Mayenne's Army: COTTON, Espenon, I. iii. 110. [N. E. D.]

*avant-garde, sb.: Eng. fr. Fr., or Fr.: the advanced guard of a military force, the front part or van of an army. Anglicised 15 c.—19 c. *avizandum, avisandum, gerund. used as sb. of Mod. Lat. avizare, = 'to consider': 'consideration' of a case when a judge takes time to consider before delivering judgment. A common term of Scotch Law, generally in the phrase "take it ad avizandum".

1860 "To hear is to obey", said Hawkesley; "that is to say, we'll take it ad [into] avizandum": Once a Week, Dec. 22, p. 702/1.

avocado, sb.: Sp. avocado: lit. 'advocate', substituted for aguacate, fr. Aztec ahuacatl, also called in Eng. avigato-pear and alligator-pear. A large pear-shaped fruit, the fruit of an American and W. Indian tree (Persea gratissima, Nat. Order Lauraceae). The form alvacata may be fr. an earlier Sp. rendering of the native name, and perhaps accounts for the English corruption alligator.

1600 There are many kinde of fruits of the countrey...as plantans, sapotes...alvacatas, tunas, mamios, limons: R. HAKLUYT, Voyages, Vol. III, p. 464. 1697 The Avogato Pear-tree is as big as most Pear-trees...the Fruit as big as a large Lemon: DAMPIER, Voy., I, 203 (1729). [N. E. D.] 1769 The avigato pear tree is between 30 and 40 feet in height: E. BANCROFT, Ess. Nat. Hist. Guiana, p. 38.

*avocat, sb.: Fr.: barrister, advocate, pleader, counsel.

1644 both our avocats pleaded before the Lieutenant Civil: EVELYN, Diary, Vol. I, p. 78 (1872). 1763 He recommended an avocat of his acquaintance to draw up the memoire, and introduced him accordingly: SMOLLETT, France & Italy, II, Wks., Vol. v, p. 258 (1817). 1882 M. Lachaud, unlike most successful avocats, never played any part in politics, even under the Empire, with which he warmly sympathised: Standard, Dec. 11, p. 5.

avogadore: It. See avvogadore.

avoira, awara, sb.: S. Amer.: name of a species of palm which grows in S. America, Desmoncus macranthus; also the fruit of this palm.

1796 I was particularly struck with the shaddock and awara...The awara, or avoira...grows upon a species of palm-tree: STEDMAN, Surinam, Vol. I, ch. I, p. 22. 1820 The avoira is common in Surinam. It is a fruit about the size of an Orleans plum, and of a deep orange colour, nearly approaching to red. This fruit grows upon a species of palm-tree: REV. W. BINGLEY, Trav. S. Amer., p. 88.

*avoirdupois, sometimes supposed to be Fr., is a corrupt 17 c. refashioning of the Eng. averdepois from the Old Fr. avoirdupois, introduced and Anglicised in the 14 c. or before, at first meaning 'merchandise of weight', i.e. sold by weight.

1828 I should suppose him some retired avoué, or a judge perhaps: Engl. in France, Vol. II. p. 68.

avoyer, sb.: Fr. perhaps fr. It. avvogadore: formerly the title of the chief magistrate of some Swiss Cantons.

1586 as if the chiefs men in Bern should chuse an Avoyer: T. B., Tr. La Primand. Fr. Acad., p. 725. — In some places they have Aduoyers, or Bourg-masters, as in the Cantons of Switzerland, and in the free townes of Germany: ib., p. 624. 1704 The chief of the state are the two avoyers...the reigning avoyer, or the avoyer of the commonwealth: ADDISON, Wks., Vol. I. p. 521 (Bohn, 1854).

*avviso: It. See aviso.

*avvocato, -ado, sb.: It.: advocate, counsel, barrister.

I. axis of revolution, central line about which revolution or rotation is made, or is supposed to be made.

I. 1. axle of a wheel.

bef. 1619 The weightines of the wheele doth settle it vpon his Axis: FOTHERBY, Athens., II. xi. § 1. [N. E. D.] 1725 the Axis of a Cutlers Grind-Stone: BRADLEY, Fam. Dict., s.v. Windmill.

I. 1 a. the axle of a wheel and axle (axis in peritrochio), one of the mechanical powers.

1673 This Chain is...put over a large Axis deeply furrowed, from which it hangs down into a Well of Water: J. RAY, Journ. Low Countr., p. 5.

I. 1 b. metaph. the pivot or hinge on which a matter turns; also, the main prop or support of anything.

1646 the Atlas or main Axis which supported this opinion: SIR TH. BROWN, Pseud. Ep., Bk. II. ch. vi. p. 73. 1660 The axis of the revolt was the religious question: MOTLEY, Netherl., I. v. 169 (1868). [N. E. D.]

I. 1 c. a process of the second cervical vertebra, upon which the head turns.

I. 2. the imaginary straight line about which a body revolves or rotates, the imaginary straight line between the poles of a heavenly body; also the earth's axis produced, about which the heavens seem to revolve.

1398 poo sterres wyndep and turnep rounde aboute pat lyne, pat is calde Axis: TREvisa, Tr. Barth. De P. R., VIII. xxxv. 1640 Th' Diameter of that nocturnal Roll | was the right Axis of this opaque sphere: H. MORE, Phil. Po., p. 325 (1647). 1646 the North and Southern Pole, are the invariable terms of that Axis whereon the Heavens do move: SIR TH. BROWN, Pseud. Ep., Bk. VI. ch. vii. p. 252 (1686). 1646 Jupiter might then be said to turn upon his Axe: Phil. Trans., Vol. I. No. 1, p. 3. 1712 a Sun moving on its own Axis: Spectator, No. 472, Sept. 4, p. 675 (Mortley). 1856 as if the axis of his eyes were united to his backbone, and only moved with the trunk: EMERSON, Engl. Traits, vi. Wks., Vol. II. p. 46 (Bohn, 1866).

I. 2 a. the imaginary straight line by the revolution of a plane figure about which solids are generated (hypothetically), whose sections at right angles to this line are circles through the centre of which the line passes, as a cone, a cylinder, a sphere.

1570 The axe of a Sphere is that right line which abideth fixed, about which the semicircle was moued: BILLINGSLEY, Eucl., Bk. XI. Def. 13, fol. 316 v<sup>o</sup>. 1571 the Axis or Altitude of the Cone: DIGGES, Pantom., III. iii. Q ij b. [N. E. D.] 1579 the Axis of the Peece: — Strat., p. 186. 1646 when the axis of the visive cones, diffused from the object, fall not upon the same plane: SIR TH. BROWN, Pseud. Ep., Bk. III. ch. xx. p. 123 (1686). 1672 an imaginary Line, lying almost like the Axis of a Cylinder between the opposite ends: R. BOYLE, Virtues of Gems, p. 70.

II. axis of symmetry.

II. 1. an imaginary line about which the parts of a regular figure or a regular solid (not being a solid of revolution, see I. 2 a) lie symmetrically. In a conic section the major axis is the diameter which passes through the foci or focus, the minor axis is the diameter at right angles to the major axis, but sometimes any diameter of a curve, i.e. any straight line which bisects a system of parallel chords, is called an axis.

1671 The Plane of the Axis is a Section wherein is the Axe of the Chrysal, which is composed of the Axes of the Pyramids, and the Axe of the Columne: H. O., Tr. N. Steno's Prodrom. on Solids in Solids, p. 53. 1776 HUTTON, Math. Dict., I. 177.

II. 2. an imaginary line marking a more or less symmetrical division of anything.

1845 The lofty mountains on the north side compose the granitic axis, or backbone of the country: C. DARWIN, Journ. Beagle, ch. x. p. 324. 1888 the longer axis of the city: Academy, Jan. 31, p. 491/2.

II. 3. Bot. (a) the axis of inflorescence, the central line about which the organs of inflorescence are symmetrically arranged; (b) the line of the main stem and root.

a. 1741 It opens from the point to the basis into seven or eight parts, hollow'd gutterwise, which joining with the Axis that runs through the middle of it, form so many Apartments full of Seeds: J. OZELL, Tr. Tournefort's Voy. Levant, Vol. III. p. 63.

III. Techn. In many sciences axis denotes a medial or central line, or a main line of direction: e.g. Geol., anticlinal axis, an imaginary line on opposite sides of which strata curve or slope downward; synclinal axis, an imaginary line on opposite sides of which strata curve or slope upward; Optics, the straight line from the eye to the object of vision, a ray passing through the centre of a lens or system of lenses; Magnetism, an imaginary line joining a pair of magnetic poles: Physiol., a main line of growth or development; axis-cylinder, a central substance of nervous matter in a nerve.

axunge, Eng. fr. Fr. axunge; axungia, Lat.: sb.: goose-grease, lard, fat of the kidneys.

1563 Brancursine, Axungia, Butter, Calves tallow...Ammomum: T. GALE, Antid., fol. 4<sup>ro</sup>. 1611 S. Nicolas knights...Had dropt their fat axungia to the lee: G. VADIAN, in Paneg. Verses on Coryat's Crudities, sig. 15<sup>ro</sup> (1776). 1630 the pinguidity or fecundious fat of the Gooses axungia (vulgarly called grease): JOHN TAYLOR, Wks., sig. K 4<sup>ro</sup>.

1779 the iya came down and told me that her mistress wanted a candle: Extract, in Echoes of Old Calcutta, 225. [Yule, Suppl.] 1782 Eyah: India Gazette, Oct. 12. [Yule] 1810 The female who attends a lady while she is dressing, &c., is called an Ayah: WILLIAMSON, V. M., I. 337. [ib.] 1829 Her Ayah she chided, scolded, beat, abused: The Bengalee, p. 181. 1863 Her Hindoo Ayah and the English maid: C. READE, Hard Cash, Vol. I. p. 336. 1882 bidding us all a cheery "good-night" as she retired with her ayah into the carriage: M. CRAWFORD, Mr. Isaacs, ch. ix. p. 182.

bef. 1869 Disjointed memoranda, the proceedings of ayuntamientos and early departmental juntas: BRET HARTE, Complete Tales, Pt. II. p. 177 (18..). 1885 Here on the platform, waiting to meet the Governor, was the whole Ayuntamiento—excepting one member, who was ill—the doctors, the old priest, and as many of the people as could be present: Daily News, Aug. 21, p. 5/7.

azabra, zabra, sb.: Sp.: a light coasting vessel. The form zabra seems to be Biscayan.

1598 Zabreas, Pataches or other small vessels of the Spanish Fleet: R. HAKLUYT, Voyages, Vol. I. p. 607. 1600 it is needfull for this armie, that so pataches be brought from Biscay, and 20 Azabras from Castro: ib., Vol. III. p. 533. — Sir John Hawkins fleet was chased by fue of the king of Spaines frigats or Zabras: ib., p. 584.

azagay: Port. See assegai.

*azalea (= z = z), sb.: Eng. fr. Mod. Lat. azalea, fr. Gk. ἀζαλέα, fem. of adj. ἀζαλέος, = 'dry': name of a genus of woody plants and shrubs (Nat. Order Ericaceae, 'heaths'), which grow in sand, and bear a profusion of large delicate flowers.

1763 CHAMBERS, Cycl., Suppl. 1767 hardy kinds of flowering shrubs and trees...such as...laburnums, hypericums, euonymus, dog-woods, azaleas, mezecons: J. ABERCROMBIE, Ev. Man own Gardener, p. 606 (1803). 1812 There was formerly a very fine shrub of this Azalea in the garden of M. Jerome van Bevernink: Med. & Phys. Journ., Vol. XXVIII. p. 341. 1857 a thicket of azaleas, rhododendrons, and clambering roses: C. KINGSLEY, Two Years Ago, Intro., p. xl (1877).

Azamoglan(d)s: Turk. See Zamoglans.

azimene, adj.: Astrol. See first quotation.

1598 Of the degrees Masculine and Feminine, bright, smokie...and diminishing fortune, and of those which bring imbecillie or weaknesse to the bodye, which are called Azimenes: F. WITHER, Tr. Dario's Astrolog., sig. F 4<sup>ro</sup>. — azemene: ib., sig. M 2<sup>ro</sup>. 1721 AZIMEN DEGREES...are certain Degrees in the Zodiack: BAILEY. 1819 J. WILSON, Dict. Astrol.

aziola: ?dialectic It. See assiuolo.

Azoara: Arab. See Assora.

azogue, sb.: Sp. fr. Sp.-Arab. az-zauga, fr. Arab. al-zāuq, = 'the quicksilver', whence also ultimately azoth (q. v.), and assogue (= z), through Fr. assogue, = 'a Spanish vessel freighted with quicksilver': quicksilver; but see quot.

1847 He told me that there are, in the mountains, mines of silver, copper, iron, and "azogue"; by this last word, I understood him to mean quicksilver; but in strict mining language, "azogue" is used to mean silver ore adapted for amalgamation; for the ores that I brought to the United States, and which he called "azogue", do not contain any mercury: Reconnaiss. fr. Fort Leavenworth, p. 486 (1848).

azoth, sb.: Eng. fr. Fr. azoth (see azogue): Alch.: cant name for mercury or quicksilver which alchemists thought to be the essential base of all metals; also Paracelsus' panacea.

1477 As Water of Litharge which would not misse, | With Water of Azot to make lac virginis: T. NORTON, Ordinall, ch. vii in Ashmole's *Theat. Chem. ## B.

B, b, be: Mus.: name of the third and tenth notes of Guido Aretno's Great Scale, the seventeenth being formerly indicated by bb. It appears that our Bb, which answers to the old B fa mi the tenth note, and B fa mi in alt the seventeenth note of the Great Scale, when they fell in the third and sixth hexachords (causing them to be called soft), was anciently regarded as the normal sound of B called B molle; while our B answers to the third note of the Great Scale and to the tenth and seventeenth notes when they fell in the fourth and seventh, or hard hexachords; so that the third note of the Great Scale, B mi, was distinguished as ♯, B quarre ('squared'), written H in German. Eventually ♯ became the sign for 'natural', and ♮, which is 'round B', the sign for 'flat'. In modern English music, B, also called Si, stands for the seventh note in the scale of C major. B molle was early Anglicised, through Fr. Bemol, as bemol(e), beemoll (= 'semitone' in Bacon's Nat. Hist., Cent. ii. § 104). See bemi.

1596 Note that the Song is called sharpe vvchich hath mi in B. fa mi, Natrall vvchich hath mi in E. la mi, and fa in F. fa vl, Flat vvchich hath fa in B. fa mi: Pathway to Mus., sig. A iiiii<sup>ro</sup>. 1597 b quarre, b molle, b fa ♯ mi: TH. MORLEY, Mus., p. 4. 1609 b fa ♯ mi: DOULAND, Tr. Ornith. Microf., p. 8. — B fa: ib., p. 22. — of Voyces, Some are called b mois viz. Vt Fa because they make a Flat sound: ib., p. 6.

*B.A. may sometimes stand instead of A.B. for Mod. Lat. baccalaureus artium, or it may stand for 'bachelor of arts'. What B.A. stands for, when applied to a woman, is uncertain; perhaps for coined Lat. baccalaura artium.

*1877 Degree of B.A.: Echo, June 4. [St.]

B. V., abbrev. for Beata Virgo, = 'the Blessed Virgin (Mary)'. B. V. M., abbrev. for Beata Virgo Maria.

*Baal (𐤁𐤏): Heb. Ba'al (pl. Ba'alim), = 'lord': the chief male deity of the Phœnicians and Canaanites, the partner of Ashtoreth. The plural properly signifies local varieties of the deity. Sometimes Baal represents any false god or false religion.

abt. 1630 but the Queen had the greater advantage, for she likewise took tale of her apostate Subjects, their strength, and how many they were that had given up their names unto Baal: (1653) R. NAUNTON, Fragm. Reg., p. 32 (1870). bef. 1667 Honour's their Ashtaroeth, and Pride their Baal: COWLEY, Wks., Vol. I. p. 119 (1707).

*baas(e), sb.: Du. baas, orig. = 'uncle': master; see boss.

1625 our Baase, (for so a Dutch Captaine is called) chose a Master of Mis-rule: PURCHAS, Pilgrims, Vol. I. Bk. iii. p. 117. — our Baase, to saue himselfe, stayed aboard: ib., p. 118.

*Babel: Heb. bābel, = 'Babylon', name of the city, on the site of which Babylon was supposed to stand, and of the tower which are mentioned in Genesis xi., which name is said, v. 9, to have been given because of the confusion of tongues.

1. a lofty tower, a monument of power, a visionary scheme of ambition.

1603 To raigh in Heav'n rais'd not with bold defiance | (Like brauing Nimrod...) | Another Babel: J. SYLVESTER, Tr. Du Barias, p. 177 (1608). 1647 the building up a Presbyterian Babell: Merc. Melancholicus, No. 11, p. 66. 1711 the fond Builder of Babells: Spectator, No. 167, Sept. 11, p. 244/2 (Morley). 1730 Some perhaps may think him able | In the state to build a Babel: SWIFT, Poems, Wks., Vol. x. p. 522 (1814).

I a. any city or empire, city of confusion.

? 1586 And second Babell, tyrant of the West, | Her ayry Towers upraised much more high: SPENS., Wks., p. 608/2 (1883). 1603 O cancell it, that they may euey where, | In stead of Babel, build Ierusalem: J. SYLVESTER, Tr. Du Barias, Babylon, p. 332 (1608). 1619 the spiritual Babel is an earthly Citie, built of Bricks, hardened by Fire from the Hellish Furnace: PURCHAS, Microcosmus, ch. xxxviii. p. 362. — farre unlike the Philosophicall Babel, bable, babble-Tower, built with earthen Bricks (humane Conceit and Arrogance): ib., ch. i. p. 7. 1675 Turk and Pope, (those Sovereigns of Eastern and Western Babel): J. SMITH, Christ. Relig. Appeal, Bk. I. ch. vii. § 1, p. 51.

1607 confused BABELS tongues are againe reduced to their significant Dialects: TOPSELL, Four-f. Beasts, sig. A 3<sup>re</sup>. bef. 1658 a Speaker, who (tho young) | Carries an ord'ed Babel in his Tongue: J. CLEVELAND, Wks., p. 351 (1687). 1665 a mixture of several Nations...who albeit they made a Babel of several Languages, yet live harmoniously: SIR TH. HERBERT, Trav., p. 100 (1677). bef. 1682 without the miracle of Confusion at first, in so long a tract of time, there had probably been a Babel: SIR TH. BROWN, Tracts, VIII. p. 43 (1686). bef. 1733 almost all Estates and Degrees of People were budded together in a Confusion of Language like Babel: R. NORTH, Examen, II. vii. 51, p. 540 (1740).

1663 Which made some think, when he did gabble, | Th' had heard three Labourers of Babel: S. BUTLER, Hudibras, Pt. I. Cant. i. p. 9. *1875 an absolute Babel of sound: Times, Oct. 4, p. 4/6. [St.] 1882 the increasing babel above made us fear that more of the enemy had arrived: S. M. PALMER, in Macmillan's Mag., Vol. 47, p. 194/1 (1883).

1623 A Babel of wild humours: B. JONSON, Masques (Vol. II.), p. 97 (1640). 1625 all the chambers | Are a mere babel, or another bedlam: BEAU. & FL., Little Thief. [T.] 1630 And they would thinke that England in confusion, | Were a mere bable Babel of confusion: JOHN TAYLOR, Wks., sig. a Aaa 3<sup>re</sup>/2. 1665 to produce Order out of a Babel of rage: R. HEAD, Engl. Rogue, sig. c 3<sup>re</sup>. bef. 1667 Thou Babel which confoundst the Eye | With unintelligible Variety! COWLEY, Wks., Vol. I. p. 131 (1707). 1675 hence proceeds the Babel or confusion of Habits: H. WOOLLEY, Gentleman's Companion, p. 78. 1728 To turn religion to a fable, | And make the government a Babel: SWIFT, Wks., p. 603/1 (1869). 1883 this Babel of confusion: W. BLACK, Yolande, Vol. I. ch. xi. p. 207.

1616 Some shew their pride in raysing stately bowers, | Which seem to threaten heaven like Babell towers: R. C., Times' Whistle, III. 938, p. 33 (1871). 1678 otherwise their whole Disputation would be but a kind of Babel-Language and Confusion: CUDWORTH, Intell. Syst., Bk. I. ch. iv. p. 194.

1673 The head of a Babirousa; it hath two long Tushes on the lower jaw, and on the upper two Horns [the canine teeth] that come out a little above the Teeth and turn up towards the Eyes: J. RAY, Journ. Low Countr., p. 29. 1790 The BABIROUSSA, though classed by naturalists with the Hog kind, differs from animals of that species in a variety of particulars: Bewick's Hist. of Quadrupeds, p. 116. 1883 The Babirousa is a species of wild hog, peculiar to the islands of Eastern Asia, and remarkable, in the male animal, for the extraordinary growth and direction of the canine teeth: Illustr. Lond. News, Sept. 8, p. 243.

*baboo, sb.: Anglo-Ind. fr. Hind. bābū: properly a title of respect attached to a name, applied to designate educated Bengalees and even native clerks who write English.

1776 I went one day to Baboo Rada Churn: Trial of Joseph Fowke, p. 11/1. 1782 "Canloo Baboo" appears as a subscriber to a famine fund at Madras: India Gazette, Oct. 12. [Yule] 1824 some of the more wealthy Baboos: B. P. HEBER, Journ., I. 31 (1844). [ib.] 1859 the corps de ballet...form part of the regular establishment of our friend the Baboo: Once a Week, Sept. 17, p. 236/2. 1871 The Bengali baboos make the pretty little males of the amadavat...fight together: C. DARWIN, Desc. of Man, Vol. II. ch. xiii. p. 49.

baboosh, babouche, baboushe. See papoosh.

*Babylon (𐤁𐤁𐤎): Gk. Βαβυλὼν, = 'Babel' (q. v.): the capital of the Chaldaean empire, famed for its size and magnificence; also, the mystic city of the book of Revelation; applied invidiously to Rome and the Papal power, and to any great, rich and wicked city, e.g. London.

Babylonish, in reference to Babel, signifies 'confused', 'unintelligible'; also, 'Romish'.

1634 The great Babilons which thou hast built: RAINBOW, Labour, 41 (1635). [N. E. D.] 1850 We weren't in a hurry to get to town. Neither one of us was particularly eager about rushing into that smoking Babylon: THACKERAY, Pendennis, Vol. I. ch. xvii. p. 175 (1879). 1852 grumbled out something about Babylon and the scarlet lady: — Esmond, I. 62 (3rd Ed.). 1663 A Babylonish dialect, | Which learned Pedants much affect: S. BUTLER, Hudibras, Pt. I. Cant. I. p. 8.

1555 As he traueyled by the coastes of this greate lande (which he named Baccallao)... Sebastian Cabot him selfe, named those landes Baccallao, by cause that in the seas therabout he founde so great multitudes of certeyne bigge fyshes much lyke vnto tunies (which the inhabitantes caule Baccallao) that they sumtymes stayed his shippes: R. EDEN, Decades, Sect. I. p. 161 (1885). 1600 there is great abundance of that kinde of fish which the Sauages call baccallao: R. HAKLUYT, Voyages, Vol. III. p. 6. 1612 It chanced by hap to be on Friday, and therefore there was no other meat in the Inne, then a few pieces of a fish called in Castile Abadexo, in Andalusia Bacallao, and in some places Curadillo...and is but poore-lohn: T. *basaltes, Lat., basalt (z), Eng. fr. Lat.: sb.: hard Trap rock with a tendency to become columnar as in the Giant's Causeway in the North of Ireland, and in the island of Staffa off Scotland. Apparently not Anglicised before the middle of the 18 c. See Lyell, Man. of Geol., ch. xxviii. According to Pliny the word is Egyptian and connotes the resemblance to iron of the blackish hard gray Egyptian variety which he describes, which was most used for statues in the Ptolemaic period and for sarcophagi and other ornamental work from the earliest times.

1601 The Egyptians also found in Aethyopia another kind of marble, which they call Basaltes, resembling yron as well in colour as hardness; and thereupon it took the name: HOLLAND, Tr. Plin. N. H., Bk. 36, ch. 7, Vol. II. p. 572. 1694 Our Irish Basaltes is composed of Columns: MOLYNEUX, Giant's Causeway, in Phil. Trans., xviii. 181. WALPOLE, Letters, Vol. 1. p. 5 (1857). 1763 reinforcing these with billet-doux, songs, and verses: SMOLLETT, France & Italy, vii. Wks., Vol. v. p. 307 (1817). 1803 This billet-doux was received on the very day appointed for lady Delacour's last interview with the quack surgeon: M. EDGEWORTH, Belinda, Vol. II. ch. xxi. p. 88 (1832). 1819 the bulletins from the army were the billet-doux in which her lovers might read their chance of success: T. HOPE, Anast., Vol. II. ch. xv. p. 337 (1820). 1840 the occasional presentation of a sippet-shaped billet doux: BARHAM, Ingolds. Leg., p. 69 (1865). 1880 Yes, indeed...it is the saddest of billet-doux: J. PAYN, Confidant. Agent, ch. xlviii. p. 315.

billiards (L = L), sb. pl., in combin. billiard: Eng. fr. Fr. billard, = 'a cue', hence, 'the game of billiards': a name of several games played on a billiard-table with ivory balls which are driven by a stick called a 'cue', according to the rules of the particular game played. The table is smooth and level, covered with a tightly stretched green cloth, and surrounded by a raised elastic cushion.

1591 With dice, with cards, with balliards: SPENS., Prosepop., 803. 1606 Let it alone; let's to billiards: SHAKS., Ant. and Cleop., ii. 5, 3. 1748 he having lost the greatest part of his allowance the night before at billiards: SMOLLETT, Rod. Rand., ch. vi. Wks., Vol. 1. p. 28 (1817). 1785 a dice-box, and a billiard mace: COWPER, Task, iv. Poems, Vol. II. p. 109 (1808). 1809 There is a magnificent pavilion, in which is a billiard-table and refreshments of all kinds: MATY, Tr. Riesbeck's Trav. Germ., Let. xxvii. Pinkerton, Vol. vi. p. 96.

Variants, beltong, bell-tongue. [N. E. D.]

*bimbashee, sb.: Turk. bing-bash, = 'captain of a thousand': colonel.

1819 So far from heeding a Bimbashee, with about eighteen hundred men, whom Mavroyeni sent about the middle of October: T. HOPE, Anast., Vol. II. ch. xv. p. 329 (1820). 1876 I was conducted to the Bimbashee, an old man, who, finding me not much impressed by his attempts to alarm, became pleasant, and provided me with coffee and cigarettes: Times, Nov. 24. [St.]

binchua, benchua, sb. See quotations.

1826 In the summer this abode is so filled with fleas and binchucas, (which are bugs as large as black beetles,) that the whole family sleep on the ground in front of their dwelling: CAPT. HEAD, Pampas, p. 17. 1845 an attack...of the Benchuca, a species of Reduvius, the great black bug of the Pampas: C. DARWIN, Journ. Beagle, ch. xv. p. 330.

binnacle, bittacle (L = L), sb.: Eng. fr. Port. bitacola, Sp. bitacula, bitacora: the box or case in which a ship's compass is placed, which stands on a pedestal in front of the steering apparatus.

1622 So the pieces being usually made fast thwart the ship, we brought two of them, with their mouths right before the bitticle: Famous Recovery of Ship of Bristol, in Arber's Eng. Garner, Vol. IV. p. 602. — We washed the ship, put everything in good order as we could, repaired the broken quarter, set up the bitticle, and bore up the helm for England: ib., p. 605. 1625 the report of the peece did teare and breake downe all the Bittickell, and compasses: PURCHAS, Pilgrims, Vol. II. Bk. vi. p. 895. 1626 In the stearge roome, the whip, the bittakell, the trauas boord, the Compasse: CAPT. J. SMITH, Wks., p. 793 (1884). 1684 As for the compass in the biddikil, the north point was turned clear south: I. MATHER, Remark. Provid., p. 65 (1856). 1773 Bittacle [not Binnacle]: JOHNSON (Author's last Ed.). 1797 The binnacle is furnished with three apartments, with sliding shutters: the two side ones have always a compass in each to direct the ship's way; while the middle division has a lamp or candle with a pane of glass on either side to throw a light upon the compass in the night, whereby the man who steers may observe it in the darkest weather, as it stands immediately before the helm on the quarter deck: Encyc. Brit.

Variants, 17 c. biticle, bittickell, bittakell, biddikil, 17 c. — 19 c. bittacle; 18, 19 cc. binacle, binnacle.

[The early form bittacle is ultimately fr. Lat. habítaculum, = 'habitation', 'lodge' (cf. It. abitacolo, Fr. habitable). The word orig. meant a shelter for the steersman. The change to binnacle in the last quarter of 18 c. may be due to the case containing two compasses, which would suggest binocle; Prof. Skeat however supposes a confusion with Eng. bin.]

biogenesis, sb.: badly coined fr. Gk.: generation of living organisms from living matter.

1811 The French must naturally smile at such mistakes, as they did at Freziers calling the Guanaco a Viscacho, which is in reality, nothing more than a rabbit: W. WALTON, Peruvian Sheep, p. 125. — they afford furs and ornamental skins, equal to the Chinchilla, particularly the viscacha, which is a species of rabbit: ib., p. 175. 1826 The greatest danger in riding alone across the Pampas, is the constant falls which the horses get in the holes of the biscachos: CAPT. HEAD, Pampas, p. 53. 1845 the necessity of a theory being felt, they came to a conclusion that, like the biscacha, the mastodon was formerly a burrowing animal! C. DARWIN, Journ. Beagle, ch. vii. p. 127.

1826 and as I knew there were many holes and biscacheros, we then slackened to an ambling canter: CAPT. HEAD, Pampas, p. 244.

biscia, sb.: It.: snake, adder, destructive worm. Mil. formation of a body of troops in the shape of a snake arranged in folds.

Dict.* 1753 Biovac, biovac, or biovac...is formed, by corruption, from the German weywach, a double watch or guard. Trev. Dict. Univ.: CHAMBERS, Cycl., Suppl. 1826 bivouack: Subaltern, ch. 2, p. 40 (1828).

2. a rest for the night in the open air taken by travellers or others; also, the situation and scene of such a rest.

1819 we pressed forward, passing by our former bivouacs in the woods: BOWDICH, Mission to Ashantee, Pt. I. ch. vii. p. 155. 1854 I do not object to an occasional bivouac: F. W. FABER, Growth in Holiness, ch. viii. p. 117 (1872).

[The orig. meaning of the word is clearly 'extra-watch', but the Ger. Beiwache is probably an etymological refashioning of the Fr. The forms biovac, biovac, biovac, represent the Fr. bivac, or its Teut. original, which is said to have been borrowed during the Thirty Years War, and of which the last part seems to have been -wacht.]

bix [-wort], sb.: perhaps the annatto-tree (see annatto), Bixa Orellana; or, as wort is hardly applicable to a tree, some plant from which a dye was got, as a substitute for true annatto, such as the turmeric plant. The Sp. bija probably represents an earlier bixa, whence comes the Bot. Lat. Bixa; so that the first part of bix-wort is probably Sp.

biza, byza, bizza, bisse, sb.: ? Port. (? fr. Malay): a weight used as money of account in Pegu; see ganza. A biza probably weighed from 4 to 4½ pounds of ganzu, which metal seems to have been current in pieces weighing about ⅓ of an ounce, called ganzas.

1688 This Ganza goeth by weight of Byze, and this name of Bysa goeth for the account of the waight, and commonly a Bysa of a Ganza is worth (after our account) halfe a duckett, little more or lesse: T. HICKOCK, Tr. C. Frederick's Voy., fol. 32<sup>vo</sup>. — a great fat henne for a Bize a peece, which is at the most a pennie: ib., fol. 35<sup>vo</sup>. 1598 great store of Dates, and sold for a bisse the batman: R. HAKLUYT, Voyages, Vol. 1. p. 391. 1599 euery Byzan maketh a hundreth Ganza of weight... That money is very weightie, for fourtie Byzas is a strong Porters burden: ib., Vol. II. i. p. 238. — the charges of two Byzes a moneth: ib., p. 239. — was sold for fiftie Bisse: ib., p. 242. 1797 BISA, or BIZA: Encyc. Brit.

*bizarre, adj., also used as sb.: Fr.: odd, fantastic.

1. whimsical, capricious, fantastic, eccentric, extravagant; in Art, unusual, irregular, aiming at peculiar effect rather than beauty.

1602 And doth not our minister shew himself more then Bizarro [marg. Bizarro in Italian a light and phantastical head] (I speak of him as understanding the Italian tongue) for bringing in Bizarius [an authority quoted by Sutcliffe] to so fond a purpose? R. PARSONS, Warn-Word to Host. West-Word, Pref., p. 12. bef. 1648 Her attire seemed as bizarre as her person: LORD HERBERT, Life. [N. E. D.] 1724 The novelty pleased, truly, but yet there was something wild and bizarre in it: DE FOE, Roxana, p. 157 (1875). 1742 he was so bizar in his dispositions, that he almost suppressed his collections and writings of the law: R. NORTH, Lives of Norths, Vol. 1. p. 122 (1826). 1767 his [Ariosto's] bizarre mixture of the serious and comic styles: HUME, Essays, Vol. 1. p. 226 (1825). 1804 Among other bizarre reflections that suggest themselves: Edin. Rev., Vol. 4. p. 90. 1821 he must not substitute what is merely bizarre...for what is naturally...interesting: ib., Vol. 35. p. 285. 1832 it was worn in a fashion—then uncommon, without being bizarre: LORD LYTTON, Godolph., ch. xvii. p. 292 (New Ed.). bef. 1849 the Duke's love of the bizarre: E. A. FOR, Wks., Vol. 1. p. 160 (1884). 1883 the reading desk rests upon an eagle of bizarre aspect: C. C. PERKINS, Ital. Sculpt., p. xlv. 1885 The former vessels exhibit some excess of that taste for the bizarre: Athenaeum, Aug. 25, p. 215/2.

2. Hortic. esp. applied to tulips and carnations, irregularly variegated with more than two colors, often used as sb.

1753 Bizarre, a term used among the florists for a particular kind of carnation, which has its flowers striped or variegated with three or four colours: CHAMBERS, Cycl., Suppl.

Variants, 17 c. bizarr, 18 c. bizarr.

[The word originally meant 'brave', 'smart', but like the It. bizzarro, has been degraded in meaning. Ultimately fr. Sp. and Port. bizarro, = 'courageous', 'generous', 'magnificent', of uncertain derivation.]

1747 an example of English bizzarrie: HOR. WALPOLE, Letters, Vol. II. p. 90 (1857). 1887 If, indeed, we can designate as guilt the bizzarrie of slandering an artist who has been humbled by his proud relative: Athenaeum, July 2, p. 13/2.

blunderbus(s), sb.: Eng. fr. Du. donderbus, = 'thunder-gun' (bus = 'box', 'tube', 'gun-barrel'): a short hand-gun with a large bore widening towards the muzzle for scattering several balls at short range; hence, metaph. a noisy random talker, and (with reference to the first part of the compound) a blunderer.

1654 In the antient wars, before these Bombards, Blunderbushes, Peters: GAYTON, Fest. Notes, IV. xi. 244. [N. E. D.] [1660-1685 I do believe the word is corrupted; for I guess it is a German term, and should be *donderbuck*s, and that is, 'thundering guns,' donder signifying thunder, and *buck*s a gun: SIR J. TURNER.] 1663-4 S. BUTLER, Hudibras. [T. L. K. Oliphant] 1676 Enter Sir Nicholas creeping out with a Blunderbus: SHADWELL, Virtuoso, v. p. 75. 1728 Jacob, the scourge of Grammar, mark with awe, | Nor less revere him, blunderbuss of Law: POPE, Dunciad, III. 150.

boa, boas, pl. boae (boas), sb.: Lat.: name of a large Italian snake, one of which was, according to Pliny, killed on the Vatican Hill in the reign of Claudius, and an infant found whole inside it.

1. Zool. a name formerly given to the Pythons of the Eastern Hemisphere, but now confined to the large serpents of America of which the best known species is the Brazilian Boa constrictor.

1601 Of monstrous great Serpents, and namely of those called Boae: HOLLAND, Tr. Plin. N. H., Bk. 8, ch. 14, Vol. I. p. 199. 1626 Boas, a Serpent of that bignesse, that being found dead, there was a childe found whole in his belly: COCKERAM, Pt. III. (2nd Ed.). 1797 [Ten species are mentioned, some Eastern, some American]: Encyc. Brit. 1830 a serpent of the boa species: E. BLAQUIERE, Tr. Sig. Pananti, p. 135 (2nd Ed.).

2. a long fur tippet, suggesting the shape of a snake, worn by women round their necks.

1836 Ladies' boas, from one-shilling and a penny half-penny: DICKENS, Sk. Bos, 225/1 (1850). [N. E. D.] 1870 The tail is used in the manufacture of boas: JEATS, Nat. Hist. Comm., 276. [ib.]

*boa constrictor, sb.: Mod. Lat.: 'boa which squeezes': name of a species of very large serpent of the genus Boa, which often exceeds twelve yards in length; the name was commonly given to large Asian and African serpents.

1797 BOA...4. The constrictor...The flesh of this serpent is eat by the Indians and the negroes of Africa: Encyc. Brit. 1840 [the Captain] Talks of boa-constrictors, and lions, and apes: BARRHAM, Ingolds. Leg., p. 186 (1865).

Boanerges, the name given to the two sons of Zebedee (Mark, iii. 17), 'which is, The sons of Thunder': hence, a powerful preacher or speaker.

Wks., Vol. v. p. 400 (1817). 1810 I saw last night at least two acres covered with brinjal, a species of Solanum: M. GRAHAM, Journal, 24 (1812). [Yule] 1836 The black and white Hādingan are the fruits of two kinds of egg-plant: the red is the tomat: E. W. LANE, Mod. Egypt, Vol. I. p. 180 note. 1860 Amongst other triumphs of the native cuisine were some singular, but by no means inelegant chefs d'œuvre, brinjals boiled and stuffed with savoury meats, but exhibiting ripe and undressed fruit growing on the same branch: J. E. TEN-NENT, Ceylon, II. 161. [Yule] 1886 From America the potato and the egg-apple, or brinjal, have been introduced: Offic. Catal. of Ind. Exhib., p. 75.

*brio, sb.: It.: briskness, sprightliness.

1854 the sheep are in his best manner, painted with all his well-known facility and brio: THACKERAY, Newcomes, Vol. I. ch. xxii. p. 247 (1879). 1872 a sketch done with what we used to call brio: G. ELIOT, Middlemarch, Bk. I. ch. ix. p. 56 (1874). 1884 He possessed a swing, an eloquence and a brio which were perfectly irresistible: E. E. SALTUS, Balsac, p. 70. 1886 variety, imaginative energy, and brio [of the Spanish drama]: F. HARRISON, Choice of Books, p. 56.

1843 Let a poor devil but draw the royal face like a pear now, or in the similitude of a brioche [this looks like a cler. error for briolette], and he, his printer, and publisher, are clapped into prison for months: THACKERAY, Misc. Essays, p. 14 (1885).

[The meaning 'blunder' comes from the speech of the French princess, daughter of Louis XVI., Si le peuple n'a pas de pain, qu'il mange des brioches, = 'if the people have no bread, let them eat cakes'.]
